Preparing a text for publication requires the attentive, eagle-eyed efforts of numerous people, starting with the authors. We thank them all profusely for trusting us with their work. It was a true leap of faith to send us a text, with the vague promise of an online publication that would have a DOI. We hope the final result meets your expectations.

Reviewers have also played a critical role in bringing these Proceedings to life, ensuring double-blind peer-reviews. They brought much more than just another pair of eyes and their intellectual openness; they also freely contributed their specific expertise – sometimes dropping other work to engage in back-and-forth discussions about possible solutions, potential exceptions. The following colleagues worked extremely hard to bring out the best in each text:

Online access to the Proceedings only became a reality thanks to the enthusiastic efforts of three colleagues who operate very much behind the scenes. Isabelle Rousset, the research engineer in the LIDLELM research group at University Grenoble-Alpes, lobbied hard to make sure all group members had regular, individual access to reference librarians from our university libraries. Thanks to Isabelle's foresight and tenacity, we came into contact with two formidably competent and patient colleagues: Sandrine Corvey-Biron and Anne-Christine Jacob. They repeatedly came to our rescue, explaining Creative Commons Licenses and the value of DOIs to us, as well as walking us through all the steps to create a collection of texts on HAL. We cannot thank them enough for their friendly smiles and creative calm in finding solutions to every problem we brought to them.

Finally, we both feel a deep debt of gratitude towards our families and friends who accepted our (temporarily) hermit-like existence and inability to go out and play as much as we would have liked, especially in the final months. Without their support, it would not have been possible for us to bring these Proceedings to you.
