Abstract

After the Fall of Constantinople on 29 May 1453, three imperial diets were held to discuss a crusade against the Turks. At all three diets the main spokesman for the emperor, Friedrich III, was Enea Silvio Piccolomini, seasoned imperial diplomat and Bishop of Siena. The first of the diets was held in Regensburg in May 1454 where Piccolomini gave the oration “Quamvis omnibus”. The second was held in Frankfurt in October. Here, Piccolomini gave the oration “Constantinopolitana clades”, one of the most important humanist Turkish orations of that period - and indeed one of period’s most remarkable orations generally. In the oration, Piccolomini spoke of the legitimacy (justitia), the benefits (utilitas), and the feasibility (facilitas) of the war. Though he may have managed, for a time, to revive flagging German enthusiasm for the crusade, the only result of the diet in this respect was the decision to hold another one in Wiener Neustadt, in the presence of the emperor, and a specific offer of military help to the Hungarians.

Note to the reader

Although Enea Silvio Piccolomini's crusade orations at the German diets in 1454-1455 have been admirably edited in the Deutsche Reichstagsakten, they could not – of course – be excluded from the present comprehensive, bilingual edition of Pius II's orations. As a matter of principle, they have been collated directly for the purpose of the present edition (but on the basis of a limited number of manuscripts), with special care to differentiate between the various versions of the text.

The RTA-edition was prepared by professor Johannes Helmrath and Gabriele Annas. All readers interested in the “Constantinopolitana Clades” and especially its Early Version should also consult this edition with its excellent introduction, its comprehensive list of manuscripts and editions, its critical apparatus, and its copious notes.

Foreword

In 2007, I undertook a project of publishing the Latin texts with English translations of the orations of Enea Silvio Piccolomini / Pope Pius II. Altogether 80¹ orations (including papal responses to ambassadorial addresses) are extant today, though more may still be held, unrecognized, in libraries and archives.

At a later stage the project was expanded to include ambassadors' orations to the pope, of which about 40 are presently known.

I do not, actually, plan to publish further versions of the present volume, but I do reserve the option in case I – during my future studies - come across other manuscripts containing interesting versions of the oration or if important new research data on the subject matter are published, making it appropriate to modify or expand the present text. It will therefore always be useful to check if a later version than the one the reader may have previously found via the Internet is available.

I shall much appreciate to be notified by readers who discover errors and problems in the text and translation or unrecognized quotations.

I. INTRODUCTION

1. Context¹

At the Diet of Regensburg held in May 1454, the representatives of the German nation and of other princes had in principle decided to go to war against the Turks and to hold another diet to plan for the crusade.

After the diet, Piccolomini returned to the emperor and asked to be released from his service in order to return to Italy and to his Sienese diocese. The emperor refused and instead required Piccolomini to represent him at the next diet, to be held in Frankfurt. In his Commentarii Piccolomini wrote:

Aeneas ... had made up his mind to return to Italy and live out his life in his native city, but when he asked the emperor's permission, Frederick refused. He kept Aeneas on to serve as his spokesman at the Diet of Frankfurt, for he seemed the only man at court who cared at all about the defense of the faith, and the only one whose rhetoric was at all effective.²

That Piccolomini himself entertained no illusions as to the possibility of mobilizing the German nation for a crusade, is manifest in his own letters from the period.³

The enthusiasm for the crusade displayed in Regensburg had turned out to be shortlived:

By this point, the Commentarii say, the Germans had changed their minds: none of them now favored the idea of a crusade. It was as if someone had dripped poison in their ears: the slightest mention of the emperor or the pope was insufferable. Both were greedy liars, they said, more interested in profit than holy war. It was a fine trick, to swindle the Germans of their treasure by proclaiming a crusade against the Turks – as though the Germans were mere barbarians! The lords of the world were greedily scheming to divide the spoils between them. But things would turn out very differently at the Diet than they expected, for the people of Germany would contribute neither money nor men for military service. All were persuaded of this opinion; they cursed the emperor and the pope, abused the ambassadors, jeered at the Burgundians (who seemed inclined to favour the expedition) and harshly assailed the Hungarians for first failing to defend their kingdom and now trying to involve Germany in their misfortune. The resolutions *passed at Regensburg were being rejected out of hand, and it seemed impossible to imagine that matters would turn out well.*¹

Matters were not improved by the absence of the emperor, and by the fact that the pope, in spite of Piccolomini's proposal to send a cardinal legate, was only represented by a bishop.² The crusade was not the only matter on the diet's agenda, and behind the scene an intense power struggle took place, involving even the possibility of effectively replacing the emperor with his own brother, Archduke Albrecht.³

But the Turkish threat was undeniable, and its seriousness was shown by the presence of envoys from Bohemia and Hungary and their urgent requests for help against the Turks.⁴

Piccolomini's oration to the Diet, the "Constantinopolitana clades", is one of the most famous of his orations.⁵

According to the Commentarii, Piccolomini's speech was well received by the audience:

But when the Diet formally convened and Aeneas made his speech – wonderful to relate – the old enthusiasm for a crusade suddenly revived in every heart. His oration lasted nearly two hours; but the audience was so utterly absorbed that no one even cleared his throat or took his eyes off the speaker's face. No one thought the speech too long, and all were sorry to hear it end⁶ ... Aeneas' speech was praised by all and written down by many, and because of it the declaration of war passed at Regensburg was reaffirmed; the Hungarians were promised aid (some 10.000 cavalry and 32.000 infantry) and it was agreed that the imperial electors and the other German princes should meet with the emperor at the approaching feast of Pentecost to make final arrangements for the expedition.^{7 8}

² Voigt, III, p. 119. Voigt believed that Piccolomini only made this proposal to be appointed cardinal himself. This may be true, though it is difficult to see how such an appointment could be made and have effect within the given timeframe. At any rate Piccolomini's proposal turned out to be quite sensible since, at the diet itself, the German princes were piqued at the lowly representation of the pope (Voigt, III, p. 125)

⁶ That others, too, thought highly of the oration is known from the great number of copies extant in European libraries and by its many later editions (RTA, 19, 2, pp. 469 ff.) as well as by remarks by the Franciscan preacher, Giovanni da Capistrano and the Bavarian envoy, Konrad Rottenauer (Voigt, III, pp. 124-125, and RTA, 19, 2, p. 467)

⁷ CO, I, 27 (Meserve, I, pp. 135-137)

In view of the reluctance of the German princes to commit themselves genuinely to a crusade, the decision to send concrete military aid to Hungary was actually a victory for the imperial diplomats,¹ first among them Piccolomini.

And as a piece of oratory in itself the “Constantinopolitana clades” is, in the words of Johannes Helmrath: ...*eine der bedeutendsten und wirkmächtigsten Akte, mit denen versucht wurde, im Westen den Fall Konstantinopels am 29. Mai 1453 intellektual und emotional zu bewältigen.*² It was also, again according to Helmrath, *one of the most widely copied orations from the last phase of manuscript production.*³ And Housley called it “a virtuoso display of his learning and oratorical elegance.”⁴

2. Themes

The main topic of the oration is obviously the war against the Turks, as decided upon at the Diet in Regensburg. Says Piccolomini in the speech: The whole issue is whether or not to go to war [Sect. 7], and: Your primary task is to consider and discuss the articles approved in Regensburg [sect. 5].

In Regensburg, six months earlier, Piccolomini had provided a double motivation for the crusade: firstly to avenge the injuries inflicted upon the Christians by the Turks, and secondly to protect Europe against future attacks.

In Frankfurt, the motive of revenge was barely mentioned and Piccolomini’s focus was now purely on the need for protection, e.g.:

- His Serene Highness has therefore found it worthwhile to summon an assembly of the princes and cities of the German nation in order to take counsel on how to protect Christianity. [Sect. 4]⁵
- ... in this case where you come to the defense not only of the fatherland, the weak, and the allies, but also of faith, the religion and the honour of God. [Sect. 16]

adhortatur. Visus est omnes vehementer commovere. Verum hoc natura compertum est eorum animos cito residere, quorum affectus facillime moventur. (Zimolo, p. 103)

⁵ Christianity in the broad sense of Christian Europe

- Your fathers entered savage battles in order to protect their lands. Should you then refuse to take up arms in order to protect your religion and faith? [Sect. 47]

In his oration Piccolomini, following classical models, deals with three main issues of the war, i.e. the justice (justitia), the benefits (utilitas), and the feasibility (facilitas) of the war.¹

Concerning the justice (justitia) of the war Piccolomini refers to the injuries and damages inflicted upon the Christian religion by the Turks, the need for the Christians to protect themselves against further attacks, and the fact that the war is requested by the two heads of Christianity, the emperor and the pope – and even by God himself! [Sect. 9]

Concerning the benefits (utilitas) of the war Piccolomini firstly points to the need for self-defense:

If you take up arms in defense of the Hungarians, the Albanians, the Serbians, and the other peoples who are neighbours of the Turk and who share our Faith, you will protect not only your allies, but also yourselves, your wives, and your children from this terrible danger. This is, Princes, the great benefit of the war as I see it. [Sect. 22]

Secondly, he points to the benefits of showing gratitude, in this case to God who has not only created the Germans as men, but also given the German Nation empire over the Latin Christian World [Sect. 24-26]. And finally, though advising against them as a motive for war, Piccolomini describes the spoils of war that will fall to the victors [Sect. 29].

Concerning the feasibility (facilitas) Piccolomini claims that the Germans are, in all matters, better suited for war than the Turks:

You have an abundance of all that is considered necessary for war, you are strong soldiers, and you have experienced leaders who are lucky in war. Moreover, it is reasonable to hope that God will favour his own cause. Since your enemies are so greatly inferior to you, there is absolutely no reason for you to shy away from a war that is so just and so advantageous. [Sect. 36]

¹ Though he knew the classical models directly from the sources (e.g. Quintilian: honestum, utile, facile), Piccolomini's division of the "Constantinopolitana clades" into justitia, utilitas, and facilitas may well have been inspired by Francesco Filelfo's division of his crusade letter to Charles VII of France into necessitas (mostly honestas), facilitas, and utilitas, cf. Filelfo: Collected, I, pp. 429. A similar division had also been used by Georg of Tipesunt in his oration to King Alfonso V, 1452 (RTA, 19, 2, p. 505, n. 35)

A subtheme worth mentioning is the need for the study of letters and learning, which figures significantly in Piccolomini's description of what was lost to the Christians with Constantinople. This matter might not seem very important to princes, nobles and soldiers. But Piccolomini, developing a common and classically inspired theme of the humanists, points to nobles' need of glory, fame and reputation, which can only be assured in literature. Therefore, the nobility and the warrior class greatly need literate people who alone can give them eternal fame:

The stronger, the braver, and the more powerful you are, Noble Knights, the more you will benefit from intellect and letters. For it is those that can make your forefathers, famous men who died a long time ago, stay alive, so to say, and transmit your name to posterity. [Sect. 15].¹

3. Date, place, audience and format

The RTA gives the date of the delivery of the oration as 15 October 1454.

The location was the Townhall of Frankfurt (Römer).²

The audience consisted of the participants in the diet.

The format was that of a diplomatic speech on behalf of emperor.

4. Text³

The text is extant in two versions: the Early Version, identical or very close to the oration as delivered in Frankfurt, and the Final version as included in the Collected Orations of Pius II, compiled in 1462 under the direct supervision of Pius himself. Further studies are required to determine if one or more intermediate versions are documented by the manuscripts.

Manuscripts containing the Final Version were selectively collated by Helmrath in his Reichstagsreden and in the RTA.¹

4.3. Present edition

For principles of edition (incl. orthography) and translation, see Collected Orations of Pope Pius II, vol. 1, ch. 9-10.

Text:

In view of the RTA-edition, the Early Version is based only on the two manuscripts in the Bibliothèque Nationale and the Epistolae familiares-edition listed above. The Final Version is based on the four manuscripts in the Vatican Library.²

In the text of the Early Version the lead ms. is the Paris 5665A (P1). In the text of the Final Version the lead manuscript is the Chis. J.VIII.284 (A).

Presentation:

The Early Version and the Final Version are presented synoptically, the Early Version above, and the Final Version below. Identical words and passages in the two versions are marked in bold types (with no regard to differences in grammatical form and syntax, and et/ac/atque-variations).

In the Final Version, passages taken from Piccolomini's letters to Pope Nicolaus V and Cardinal Nikolaus of Kues of 19 July and 21 July, respectively, are underlined.

Textual apparatus:

Variants not indicated in RTA-edition (where they have the sigla P and P1 respectively) are marked with an asterisk.

Pagination:

Pagination is from the Chis. J.VIII.284 (A).

5. Sources^{1 2}

In this oration, 103 direct and indirect quotations from various sources have been identified, less than half from the Bible. The number of quotations is much greater than in the previous oration, the "Quamvis omnibus" [21], which had only 13, possibly indicating a greater level of preparation.

1. Introduction

[1] [FV] Reverend fathers, illustrious princes, and you others, noble and eminent men, the Fall of Constantionople was a great victory for the Turks, a total disaster for the Greeks, and a complete disgrace for the Latins, which - I trust - it will pain and hurt each of you, and the more so the more noble and good you are. For what is more proper for a good and noble man than to care for the true faith, to favour religion, and to extol and spread the name of Christ, Our Saviour, as much as you can? But now that Constantinople is lost, and this great city has fallen into the power of our enemies, now that so much Christian blood has been shed, and so many people¹ have been carried off into slavery, the Catholic Faith has been grievously injured, our religion has suffered a shameful reverse, and the name of Christ has been grievously harmed and abused.

[2] [FV] Truly, for many centuries the Christian community has suffered no greater disgrace than today. Our forefathers often experienced setbacks in Asia and Africa, that is in other regions, but we, today, have been beaten and struck in Europe¹ itself, in our fatherland, in our own home and seat. If somebody says that it is many years since the Turks came from Asia² to Greece, the Tartars settled in Europe on this side of Tanais,³ and the Saracens crossed the Herculean Sea,⁴ occupied a part of Spain⁵ and inflicted many defeats upon the Christians, [my answer is that] until now we have never lost a city or a place equal to Constantinople, and never have we, In Europe, lost so much Christian and noble blood to the infidels as now.

Constantinople is almost at the center of all lands⁶ that may be easily cultivated, and it has a very large and safe harbour where ships, nay immense fleets, can be armed and provisioned. In one direction, the way is open through the Bosphorus to the Euxine Sea, that we today call the Great Sea⁷, and all its Northern and Eastern coasts. And in the other direction, you may easily pass through the Hellespont,⁸ that we now call the Arm of Saint George, to the West and to the coasts of the Mediterranean. This place, so advantageous, so useful and so important, has now been lost to Christ, Our Saviour, and gained by Muhammad, the Seducer, while we were silent, not to say asleep.

[3] [FV] Moreover, the Christians have had two emperors, one Latin and one Greek. Now that the Greek emperor has been killed together with his nobles, will you not say that one of the two eyes of Christianity¹ has been plucked out and one of its two hands cut off?

In the whole world, four empires have been considered great and outstanding: the empire of the Assyrians, the empire of the Greeks, the empire of the Carthaginians, and the empire of the Romans. The first one may be called the Eastern Empire, the second the Northern Empire, the third the Southern Empire, and the fourth the Western empire.

In the same way, our forefathers established four patriarchal sees: the Antiochene See they gave to the Eastern people, the Constantinopolitan See to the Northern people, the Alexandrinian See to the Southern people, and the Roman See to the Western people. The patriarchal sees of Jerusalem, Aquileja and Grado, now translated to Venice, were founded long afterwards and are not to be considered as equal to the first four. Of the four principal patriarchates, our forefathers lost two, together with the See of Jerusalem, due to passivity and mutual conflicts.² ³ Because of the same passivity, but to our greater shame, we ourselves have now lost the third one, the one that is followed by all the Ruthenians and many peoples to the North and East of Tanais. No wonder, Nobles, that you are all grieving, shocked and stupefied by this great blow to Christianity, seeing that at one stroke the Greeks have fallen, the Turks are victorious, and the Latins have been thrown into confusion and disorder.

¹ The image of Rome and Constantinople as the two "eyes" of the world was coined by Themistius (4th century)

[4] [FV] The grief of Holy Emperor Friederich was just as great as yours. You should have seen him when he was first informed about this catastrophe, crying in his chamber, sorrowful in court, worried in council, praying in church, and everywhere downcast and anxious. For a long time food gave him no pleasure and sleep no rest.¹

But since the Turks are daily threatening Christendom with greater evils, it does not need moaning and tears as much as vigour and weapons. His Serene Highness has therefore found it worthwhile to summon an assembly of princes and cities of the German nation in order to take counsel on the protection of Christianity. Indeed, he remembered the saying: *For, before you begin, there is need for deliberation, and for prompt action after you have deliberated.*² An assembly was therefore summoned in Regensburg, and you all know what happened there. The present meeting is held at the decision of that assembly. During the last days, it has been amply explained why this meeting is not held in Nürnberg, and why the emperor is unable to be present, for he would most certainly have come to the upper parts of the empire in such an important matter if he had been able to leave his lands safe.

[5] [FV] Though his desire was frustrated by those who benefit more from strife and war than from peace and tranquility, he still wanted this meeting to be held. Therefore, he sent these princes¹ to act in his place and to represent him, and he has given them full and ample powers. They are prepared to negotiate both on the affairs of the empire and the common matter of the Faith. But since your primary task is to consult and deliberate on the articles considered in Regensburg, you wish to know the emperor's mind on the matter. Therefore, by the authority of my colleagues I am now requested to explain his mind, his opinion and his intentions on these issues. As I would rather seem stupid through obedience than clever through defiance, I have taken this almost unbearable burden upon my shoulders, trusting in help from Him who would rather have obedience than sacrificial victims.² And I do not fear to falter under this great burden since some here will readily lend me a hand if I stumble.³ And I obey so much more gladly that I see your numerous and kindly disposed assembly.⁴

[6] [FV] I am also moved by the fact that the matter on which I am to speak is important and urgent: should we go to war against the Turks who have unjustly conquered Constantinople, who have killed the Greek nobles and their emperor, who have polluted all the holy places, and who are threatening all Christians with chains, whips, murder and atrocious torture? If I convince you to do this, we shall easily settle the issues of how large a force is necessary, how the soldiers should be found, what wages to pay, which privileges to grant, how to provision the army, what war machines to prepare, as well as the time of departure, and the route to follow.¹ It will also be easy to appoint a captain or leader of the war - whom the ancient Romans called imperator. You will not hesitate to choose someone who has expert knowledge of military affairs, great bravery, evident authority and luck,² and who shows application to duty, courage in danger, thoroughness in operation, rapidity in execution, wisdom in strategy.³ I do not doubt that there is such a man among you. And as I shall explain later, you will not have to worry about keeping peace at home if you decide to go to war abroad.

[7] Now you understand, Princes, the substance of my oration and what the matter is all about:¹ the whole issue is whether or not we should go to war. I have come to persuade you, in the name of the emperor, to go to war, and I have only accepted this burden because I see that the matter is clearly worthy of your courage, your nobility and your nation. So, do now consider, hear, and examine the issue of undertaking this war for the sake of the Catholic Faith. Noble princes, every senate and every people that has to deliberate on going to war should discuss, carefully and stringently, three things so that it will not do anything that it will later regret. For, as the saying of Scipio goes, it is shameful to err and then afterwards to say: *I had not thought of that!*² So, anyone who is going to war should first ask: is the war just? Secondly, is it useful? And thirdly: is it feasible?³ If these conditions are not met, there is no reason for good men to go to war.

Let us now discuss this matter, Princes, and first let us examine the justice of the war.

2. Justice of the war

[8] [FV] None of the ancients ever doubted the justice of a war conducted on the authority of superiors with the purpose of protecting religion, saving the fatherland, or helping allies.² Thus we remember the battles of Moses, Joshua, Saul, David and the Machabees. And the harangues of Demosthenes³ when he filled the whole theatre with enthusiasm, praising those who had died for the fatherland at Marathon⁴, at Artemisium⁵, and at Salamis⁶ ⁷. Of the Romans, we remember the Horatii, the Decii, the Fabii and almost countless⁸ others who gave their lives for the salvation of their countrymen. And of your own, we shall always praise [those named] Charles, Roland⁹, Rainald¹⁰, Konrad, Otto, Heinrich, Friederich and Rudolf who drove now the Tartars, now the Saracens not just from their own homes, but also from the lands of their allies and friends. Here someone may say: "But these men were provoked by savage injuries." But, Princes, is it a slight injury that the Christian community has suffered now? Or have you forgotten the reports from Constantinople? I must tell you again¹¹ about the catastrophe in Constantinople for thus the magnitude of the disaster will be better known and the justice of the war made more evident.

[9] [FV] Without any provocation whatsoever, Mehmed¹ (as the ruler of the Turks is called) went to war against the Greeks, and besieged and conquered the poorly defended Constantinople. There, in the final peril of his fatherland, Emperor Constantine² was killed, fighting desperately against the Turks as they entered the city. His head was set on a spear and carried around for all to see. The Greeks were slaughtered miserably. Not only those who tried to defend themselves, but also those who had thrown down their weapons and surrendered were killed. I accept that many were killed in the first furious assault. But I find it horrible and revolting that when the city had been conquered,³ the arms laid down, and the citizens enchain'd, then the worst atrocities took place, then sons were killed before the eyes of their parents, then noblemen were butchered like cattle, then priests were tormented and monks tortured,⁴ then holy virgins were ravished, then matrons and daughters-in-law were abused. Oh, miserable city! Oh, unhappy people! Oh, accursed Mehmed! *Who can tell this without shedding tears?*⁵ Everywhere you would see mourning, murder, blood and corpses.

[10] [FV] Mehmed himself - with fearsome face, wild eyes, terrible voice, cruel words, and horrible gestures - demands murder, and now he orders this one, now that one to be killed. He washes his hands in the blood of Christians. He defiles everything. He pollutes all. The temples of our God are given over to the false prophet,¹ the divine altars are torn down, the bones of martyrs and other saints now reigning with Christ are thrown to pigs and dogs,² the statues are smashed, the paintings destroyed. Not even the icon of the Mother of God, the Queen of Heaven, the glorious Virgin Mary, is spared. A crucifix is brought to the camp with much shouting and scornful laughter and to the accompaniment of drums and trumpets. There it is mocked, spat upon and soiled. Oh, unatonable crime! Oh, dishonour to the Christian people! Oh, eternal shame to our name: the sign under which we have been redeemed and saved was mocked by the rotten people of the Turks, [putting up a sign saying]: "This is the God of the Christians!"³ in order to show that what we are venerating is an empty symbol.⁴

[11] I feel how moved you are¹, Princes, as I speak about the insult to Our Savior, and as I relate the harm done to this great city. *Who could unfold in speech the fall of that city, and the carnage? Who could match the toils with tears?*² My mind shudders to remember these things and recoils in pain.³ Alas, how many Greek cities, once rich and famous, have now disappeared? Where now is Thebes, where is Athens, where is Mycene, where is the city of the Corinthians, Sparta and all those other once famous cities? Nobody can point to the place where they were in former times.⁴ Often our people are searching for Greece in Greece itself. Out of so many of cities,⁵ now corpses, only Constantinople survived. In very old days, it was a small settlement founded by Pausanias.⁶ Then Constantine, first emperor of that name, raised it in imitation of the city of Rome.⁷ Constantinople had so many wonderful works, so many armaments, and so much learning and literature⁸ that it could, on its own, compensate and mend the loss of all the other cities.

[12] [FV] After peace had been concluded with Gratian and confirmed by Emperor Theodosius, Athanaricus, King of the Goths, [came to visit Constantinople].¹ When he had seen the size and splendor of the royal city, he was deeply impressed and reportedly said: “Truly, the emperor is God on earth since he is obeyed by so a great city. And whoever raises his hand against him, is guilty of his own blood.”² And though Constantinople was conquered and pillaged several times³ after the empire had been transferred to you,⁴ oh, Germans, it never before fell into the power of the enemies of Christ, never were the basilicas destroyed, never were the libraries burnt, and never were our holy things profaned. Thus, to this day Constantinople has remained a monument to the old wisdom, and since it was like a home to letters and a high citadel of philosophy, none of the Latins appeared to be truly learned if he had not studied for some time in Constantinople. For the reputation of learning that Athens had when Rome flourished⁵ was taken over, in our age, by Constantinople. From there we received many volumes written by the wise men of old, full of holiness and learning, and we hoped to receive more in the future.⁶ But now, that the Turks are victorius and possess everything that mighty Greece possessed I fear that the days of Greek letters are over.⁷

[13] [FV] Many think that the Turks come from Asia Minor and call them Teucrians (though the Teucrians certainly did note hate letters).¹ But [this is not so:] the Turks are a Scythian people that have come from the middle of Barbary.² According to the philosopher Aethicus,³ they dwelled beyond Euxinum⁴ and the Pirrichian Mountains⁵ by the Northern Sea. It was an unclean, inglorious people, debauched and practicing all kinds of sexual excesses. According to your Otto, Bishop of Freising,⁶ the Turkish people came out from the Caspian Mountains at the time when Pippin ruled the Franks,⁷ set off on the long road to Asia Minor, and stayed there ever since. Having lived for many centuries under a pleasant sky and in a gentler country, they have acquired some culture, but still they reek of their former uncouthness, and they have not completely put off their barbarous manners. They still eat the flesh of horses, bisons, and vultures,⁸ they are slaves of lust, they indulge in cruelty, they hate letters, and they persecute the studies of humanity. Now, learned and eloquent Greece has fallen into their hands: how anybody can deplore this enough, I do not know.^{9 10}

¹ Actually, Piccolomini himself was one of them, e.g. his oration “Audivi” [1] of 1436 and later orations, as late as 1447, where he directly used the term Teucri for the Turks

[14] [FV] But, soldiers, here you say: "Why do you talk so much about the losses to letters? We fight with spears and swords. We have no interest in letters." Not so, Mighty Knights, for you are actually those who have the greatest need of flourishing studies of letters. For it is those that can make your forefathers, famous men, though dead for many years, stay alive - so to speak - and transmit your name to posterity. Alexander of Macedonia¹ knew the power of letters to ensure fame, for when he saw the tomb of Achilles² in Sigeum,³ he said: *Fortunate youth, to have found in Homer a herald of thy valour!*⁴ Cicero⁵ adds that *well might he so exclaim, for if that art had never existed, the same mound which covered Achilles' bones would also have overwhelmed his memory.*⁶ And Themistocles,⁷ the famous Athenian, when asked what voice he loved best to hear, replied, *That which bears most eloquent testimony to supreme prowess.*⁸ By these words, he highly recommended the studies of humanity and eloquence.

[16] [FV] But now that Greece has been overrun, the studies of eloquence and all the good arts are either dead or have been greatly reduced. I admit that such studies exist in many places in the Latin world, but they are rivulets flowing from Greek springs.¹² Now that the spring has dried out, these studies will to some extent dry up, too. What, Princes, shall we say about so great a loss, such great damage? Will we doubt that it is just to wage war against these human monsters who hate letters, who do not respect treaties, who have taken that great city from us, who are thirsting for your blood, who cannot get enough slaughter, who profane and destroy our holy things, and who threaten all Christians with the direst punishments. Ambrose³ says that *the use of force in a war to protect one's country from the barbarians, or the weak at home, or allies from robbers, is absolutely legitimate.*⁴ So what shall we think in this case where you come to the defense not only of the fatherland, the weak, and the allies, but also of Faith, religion, and the honour of our God?

You have heard what the Constantinopolitans have suffered. The same [destiny] now awaits many other cities if you do not bring them help in time. [19] [FV] After the death of King Albrecht,¹ the Hungarians have been defeated twice in war, twice they have been overcome by the Turks, and they lost more 100,000 men just in these two battles.² Even when the Hungarians were at full strength, they could not stand against the forces of Turks. How can they resist them now that they are beaten? Even when they had help from the Poles, they were broken.³ How can they now win on their own? Great is the power of the Turks⁴ both in Asia Minor and in Greece, and they now have an alliance with the savage Tartar people. They can mobilize an army of 200,000 to 300,000 soldiers.⁵ Though the Hungarians are vigorous and strong, they cannot equal forces of that size. And if Hungary is defeated or joins up with the Turks, neither Germany nor Italy will be safe, and the Rhine will not protect the French.

[20] [FV] But since they have not seen anything like it in our own time, many do not think that this is possible. We do know, however, that often the Tartars overran Hungary, entered Germany, and pushed forward as far as to the Rhine. And often the Hungarians themselves raided Austria, Bavaria, Swabia, Francony and Saxony. We know how large forces King Attila¹ of the Huns brought to Italy, Germany, and the *farther regions of France*² and Spain when he came out of Hungary. And what about the Goths, the Vandals, the Gepids and the Longobards? All these peoples, passing through Hungary, inflicted terrible sufferings upon Germany, Italy, and the other nations.

[21] [FV] So, shall we now just wait for the Turks to summon the Tartars and then come upon us, as a swarm of locusts,¹ to overwhelm Hungary and afterwards subdue the rest of Christendom? [No!] We must fight, Princes, if you want to live as Christians and as free men. Consider now if it will be more useful to do so with your allies safe and unbroken rather than destroyed and lost. The Romans, who are reputed to have been rather wise, regarded the protection of their allies as vital to their own security,² and they preferred to fight abroad rather than at home. For if something goes wrong abroad, it can be set right, whereas defeats suffered at home are disastrous. This is why the great Carthaginian general, Hannibal,³ persuaded King Antiochus⁴ of Syria to fight the Romans not in Asia Minor nor in Greece, but in Italy.⁵⁶

[22] [FV] You, Germans, should imitate your forefathers who always endeavoured to fight their wars far from home and to protect the territories of their allies as much as their own. And if you do not help the Hungarians, there is no reason why you should, in your turn, expect help from the French, or why the French, in their turn, should get help from the Spaniards.¹ Thus, it will happen that our enemies always fight each people separately and thus easily obtain the lordship over the whole world they desire. But if you take up arms in defense of the Hungarians, the Albanians, the Serbians and the other peoples who are neighbours of the powerful Turks and who share our faith,² then you will protect not only your allies, but also yourselves, your wives and your children³ from this terrible danger.

This, Princes, is the great benefit of the war as I see it. When we hear that the Turks are marching towards you with all speed, you should go to oppose them before they enter your region, and help your neighbours. The words of Horace⁴ certainly apply here:

[23] [FV] Even if you could be certain that Turks would never come to you, you still ought to fight for the sake of the baptism through which you were initiated, for the great gifts that Pious God has granted you in abundance, and to avenge the insults against your God. For the virtue of gratefulness is not only the greatest of virtues, it is also the mother of all the others. What, indeed, is piety other than a grateful disposition towards parents? Who fight willingly for their country other than those who remember the benefits received from it? [26] [FV] These gifts of God are shared by all the faithful. But you, oh, Germans, have a greater obligation towards God because He has shown you a special honour. For in giving you the empire, He raised you above all the other peoples and nations. This dignity is the first in the world, and all princes and kings bow to it. Even Our Saviour, when he was born, traveled around, and died according to the flesh, considered it worthy of every honour.¹ It was promised by the prophets, approved in the Gospel, and magnificently recommended in the writings of the apostles. This is the supreme dignity, and so long as it stands firm, we need not fear the coming of Antichrist, as Tertullian,² Cyprian,³ Augustine, and many of the ancients seem to gather from the words of Paul, Doctor of the Gentiles. Therefore, our forefathers, filled with the Holy Spirit, wished *a long life, a secure empire, a safe home, a strong army, a loyal senate, an honest people, and a quiet world*⁴ to the emperors even when these still worshipped pagan idols.

[28] [FV] What do you say to this, Princes? Why do you think it happened? Do you believe that the arm of the almighty Lord has been shortened or lost its power.¹ *Can he not send more than 12 legions of angels*² to destroy the Saracens and the Turks blaspheming against him? Or just say a word and his will shall be done? [29] [FV] So why do you hesitate, Princes? Will it not be greatly worthwhile to go to war against those who blaspheme against Christ?¹ Thus you will show that you remember the favour done to you, you please God, your souls benefit, and you gain Heaven where you will triumph together with the saints, live together with the angels, and reign together Christ.

Here, I pass over, Princes, the gains that most soldiers today seek in war: gold, silver, tapestries, paintings, clothes, horses, slaves and slave girls. For though this expedition promises much of that, I do not want you, as soldiers of Christ, to desire such things, I do not want you to wish for plunder, I do not want you to rejoice in spoils of war. It is the small mind that covets earthly gains. The great and noble mind aims at treasures in Heaven.

Short is the allotted period of a lowly and miserable life. While we call for wine, food, and sleep, old age is creeping on us unperceived.*³ Nobody knows what evening will bring. Uncertain is the course of our life. *We are strangers on earth,*⁴ and our hopes should be turned towards Heaven, *where thieves do not break through and moth do not consume.*⁵ Many are the ways leading to Heaven, but today, Princes, the most certain, the most safe, the most easy, the most glorious way to go to Heaven is to take up arms and shield against the Turks, the infidel enemies of our celestial fatherland, the eternal city, Jerusalem on high, and to make war with pure and constant hearts.

I believe that now you understand, Princes, that the war I am advocating is not only just, but also useful.

4. Feasibility of the war (Facilitas)

[31] [FV] Now I shall say something about the feasibility of the war,¹ for that is what I promised to speak of last. In vain would I have shown you that the war is just and useful if I cannot also show that it is feasible, not to say possible. Excellent Nobles, I believe that here we must consider whether the military skills, experience in war, funds and strength of our enemies are greater than yours, and whether God favours them more than you. If the two sides had equal resources, I would not counsel war. For according to Octavian Caesar² anyone one who goes to battle without a sure advantage is like a man who *fishes with a golden hook*³: it is easy to lose more than you can gain.

¹ Flavio Biondo had touched upon theme of facilitas in his oration “Jucundum hoc loco” (Naples, April 1452) to King Alfonso V and Emperor Friedrich III: Adest vero, serenissimi reges, nedum facultas, sed maximi conficiendi facilitas, si modo curas in id vestras congitationesque omnes, sicut debetis, conferre volueritis. However, he did not develop the theme concretely (Flavio Biondo: Scritti, p. 110-111)

You have expelled the Gauls and gained the lands of the Belgae and the Helvetii. You have invaded Rhetia and Noricum and reached out towards Italy. You have wrested the Ulmerigi, now called the Prussians, from the hands of the infidels. Because of them you were able to extend your frontiers so much that you could resist Roman power better than any other people. Even Julius Caesar,⁴ who defeated all other countries and conquered the whole world, subdued the Gauls, and often crossed the Rhine, had to leave the warlike and fierce tribe of the Swabians undefeated.⁵

Augustus Octavian, who received gifts from the Parthians and the Indians, was considered to be the most fortunate of all Romans, as said in these verses:

Augustus Caesar, son of a god⁶, who will again establish a Golden age in Latium amid fields once ruled by Saturn; he will advance his empire beyond the Garamants and Indians to a land which lies beyond our Stars, beyond the path of year and sun, where sky-bearing Atlas wheels on his shoulders the blazing star-studded sphere.⁷

[34] [FV] It would, indeed, take too long to relate the troubles inflicted on the Roman state by the Germans. For a period they had to give way to Roman fortune, but later, under emperors like Charles, Ludwig, Otto, Heinrich, and Friedrich, they often triumphed over the Romans, the Gauls, the Spaniards, and the Hungarians. And even when the Romans were the lords, they performed their great feats with the help of German auxiliary troops. So great was the Germans' courage in war and their loyalty at home that the legion guarding the emperor's body was mostly selected from the Germans.¹

[35] [FV] Let us now compare you with the Turks to see what we may hope for in a battle between you. You are born to weapons, they are forced to them. You are armed, they are unarmed. You use swords, they use knives. You draw crossbows, they use simple bows. You are protected by coats of mail and cuirasses, they are covered by padded doublets. You master your horses, they are mastered by theirs. You are led to war by generals, they force servants and artisans to go to war. Your soldiers are born and raised in arms, they draw their troops from the fields and the workshops – except for a standing army of 15,000 soldiers whom they always have at the ready.¹ Your sport is to rein the steed and shoot arrows from the bow. Your young men wish for tournaments or shake cities in battle. All your life is worn down with iron's use, and sluggish age does not weaken your hearts' strength or change your vigour. On to white hair you press the helmet, and you are content when you have fresh causes for war and live under arms. But they wear embroidered saffron and gleaming purple; sloth is their joy, and their greatest pleasure is the dance.²

[36] [FV] Only Mehmed and those fifteen thousand I mentioned before delight in the din of weapons,¹ and their warlike spirit makes them fearless in battle. The others, as you will see, are inexperienced, timid, effeminate² and worthless. If you fight these people, you will undoubtedly win, if only you do not turn your fight for God into a fight against God. Your forefathers, Princes, conquered all peoples, both those living close by and those living far away, in glorious war, and fearing nobody they were feared by everybody. You yourselves are in no way inferior to your forefathers, you have an abundance of all things considered necessary for war, you have strong soldiers and experienced leaders, fortunate in war. Moreover, it is reasonable to hope that God will favour his own cause. Since your enemies are so greatly inferior to you, there is absolutely no reason for you to shy away from a war that is so just and so advantageous.³

[37] [FV] Here somebody may object that, “we shall not only have to do with the Turks, but also with the Tartars, the Saracens and all the peoples they have subjugated.” My reply is that neither will you Germans be fighting alone. The Serbians, the Bulgarians, all the Illyrians¹ and all the Greeks will seize the moment and rise against the Turks. [38] [FV] Also the Venetians and the Genoese,¹ those mighty peoples, will help you with fleets though they are presently at peace with the Turks.² But they were forced to make peace so as not lose their Eastern cities, and what people do unwillingly and out of necessity, they cannot do for long and diligently. The Venetians have made a sure promise to the emperor that they will act as Christians should if the believers decide on a common war against the Turks. I am quite certain, Nobles, that if you take up arms, then all Christianity will support you. But should they stay at home, I do not doubt that Germany is strong enough to undertake this war on its own. For I know that Duke Godefroy of Lorraine³ together with a force consisting only of the Germans from across the Rhine and some French and a few Italians passed through Hungary, entered Greece, crossed the Hellespont, went through Asia Minor, and reached Jerusalem.⁴ On the way, they defeated and crushed all the peoples who came against them, though many Turks and Saracens tried to oppose them. His army is reported to have had 200,000 soldiers – and Germany can muster much greater forces than that.

⁴ Note that in the Final Version, as edited in 1462 for the Collected Orations of Pius II, the text says that they reached Jerusalem (pervenerint), not – as in the Early Version – that they reclaimed Jerusalem (vendicasse). This change may be due to the fact that by 1462 any ambition of recovering Jerusalem was deemed completely illusory and had disappeared from Pius' crusade rhetorics. This development actually happened between the beginning of the Congress of Mantua in September 1459 (see oration “Cum bellum hodie” [45], sect. 7) and the end of the congress in January 1460 (see oration “Septimo jam mense” [54], sect. 2)

[39] [EV] Here you will say - I presume: "How can we make war abroad, when we are fighting at home, and no part of Germany is quiet. Let there be peace at home, then we can fight abroad." Princes, the Turks will reach the Rhine before all your conflicts have been solved. Therefore, the wise men who were in Regensburg considered it necessary to declare a five-year armistice in all of Germany; this should now be put into effect. All those who are warring are either princes, or vassals or subjects of the empire. If they do not obey the commands of the emperor, they break faith, sully their honour, damage the state and harm themselves. That I will absolutely not believe of such great nobles. For who will be so hard, so obstinate, so averse to proper conduct that he will presume to break a truce instituted for the common salvation of the Christians. The apostolic legate¹ is present: he will intervene with ecclesiastical censures. And the imperial legates will add the ban of the empire and other punishments.

[42] [FV] “But what shall we do about the Prussians who have rebelled against their lords and defected from the German Order to the King of Poland?”¹ There are three remedies to this: two I shall speak about now, the third one I shall keep for later. Either our truce will be kept there, too, as in the other German conflicts, or – if this is unacceptable to the order – then allow the brethren to fight for their province together with Saxons, Bohemians and whoever else they may be able to attract to their cause. This will not be a great problem with regard to your army for when Konrad, whom I spoke of a moment ago, was emperor, and the Roman Pontiff, Eugenius,² urged the Christians to protect the Holy Land that the Saracens were striving to conquer, the Prussians like other peoples living beyond them were worshipping idols. Frequently, they attacked now Saxony, now their other neighbours who worshipped Christ. Therefore, Konrad let the Saxons and other neighbours stay at home so that they could fight the Prussians and other barbarians while he himself went to Jerusalem together with the Rhinish, the Swabians, the Franconians and the Bavarians.³ The same you can do now.

Though he is a barbarian by nature and abhors letters, he avidly hears about the deeds of great men, and he puts Julius Caesar and Alexander the Great above all.¹ He is confident that he shall be able to surpass their illustrious deeds and is striving to do so. And he claims that he is no less capable of conquering the world than they since he starts from a much more advantageous position than they reportedly did.² And since he has won Constantinople for the false prophet, Muhammad, after whom he was named, he does not doubt that he shall be able to do the same with Rome,³ full, as he is, of barbarian audacity and Asian arrogance.⁴ Such is your enemy, noble men! Consider now if such a character is likely to rest.

² Mehmed's supposed fascination with Julius Caesar and Alexander the Great was frequently commented upon in contemporary Western writings, but the present passage may likely have been adapted from Jacopo Tedaldi's eyewitness account of the Fall of Constantinople to Pope Nicolaus V of 16 August 1453, in Pertusi, I, p. 186-187: Si sa da coloro che sono scampati dal Turco e che sono a conoscenza delle sue condizioni e della sua Potenza che egli ha ventitré o ventiquattro anni ... pieno di coraggio e dedideroso di signorreggiare e di convertire tutto il mondo, assai più che Alessandro o Cesare o altro potente che viene ricordato, poichè egli stima dio avere una Potenza ed una signoria assai più grande di quell'ache sia mai stata posseduta da altri. E si faceva sempre leggere le loro storie ... See also Setton, II, p. 137

⁴ See Leonardo of Chios' eyewitness account of the Fall of Constantinople to Pope Nicolaus V of 16 August 1453, in Pertusi, I, p. 168: Alias scito in tantam iam hostem superlatam pomparam, ut non erubescat dicere sinum Adriaticum penetrare Romamque venturum. Cf. Setton, II, p. 137

When this man had conquered Constantinople, did he not immediately destroy Pera,¹ fall upon the cities in the area, lay waste to the Cycladean Isles in the Aegaean Sea, and expel the ruler from Serbia? And though the Turks had a truce with the Hungarians, they entered their lands and wasted their fields.² This is the peace of the Turks, Noble Men, this is the quiet that you can hope for! Do not be confident! Do not procrastinate! See yto your own affairs, your advantage and your liberty while you still have time.

5. Conclusion

[45] The Emperor asks you not to fail the Christian commonwealth and yourselves. Instead you should, as much as you are able to and as decided in Regensburg, mobilize soldiers, horses, weapons, wagons, war machines and provisions. On his part, the emperor promises all the resources at his disposal for this purpose. Whatever is incumbent upon him as emperor, as Duke of Austria, as a God-fearing prince and as a Christian, he will do promptly and gladly, provided that you, Princes, now come to an agreement on waging the war. For if ever there was a time for fighting, it is indeed now, when not only your honour and state, but even your very liberty, faith and life are at stake. And if you let the Turks come to you, we shall not have to ask in what state or faith you live, but whether you will be allowed to live at all.

[46] [FV] Remember your forefathers, Nobles, and consider their glorious achievements! Think of how often they crossed the Italian Alps with great armies in order to defend the Roman Church. Pippin¹ restrained² Aistulf, King of the Longobards,³ when he was causing trouble for Pope Stephen.⁴ Charlemagne⁵ checked Desiderius⁶ when he abused Adrian.⁷⁸ Arnulf⁹ subdued the Romans¹⁰ who rebelled against Pope Formosus.¹¹ At the call of John,¹² Otto I.¹³ defeated Berengarius¹⁴ who bragged of being King of Italy. It would take too long to relate how often your predecessors fought for the Roman Church, for the Catholic Faith, and for the salvation of all.¹⁵

[47] [FV] See now in what spirit you should act. Your fathers went to war not just for their citizens, but even for their peasants if they had just been treated rudely. So, should you not consider it worth fighting when an emperor has been killed cruelly, together with all the nobility of Greece? Your fathers did not hesitate to take up weapons if their officials had been treated insultingly. So, should you not arm yourselves when your God has been shamefully scorned? Your fathers entered savage battles in order to protect their lands. So, should you refuse to take up arms in order to protect your religion and faith? This war is not about trifles. You must go to war for your country, for your children, for your wives, for your homes, for your liberty, for your life, for your faith, for your religion, for the holy martyrs, for the great apostles, for Mary, glorious Mother of God, our patron, Queen of Heaven, for the Son of God, for the Saviour, for your great and undoubted God, for the Holy Spirit who leads us, and for the divine Trinity, persecuted by that filthy Muhammad.¹ Consider, Princes, to what state the Christian religion has been brought, and how greatly our Faith has been reduced in the East and the South. Take courage! Be brave! Defend your mother the Church through whom you were reborn in Christ. *Gird your swords upon your thighs, o Mighty Men,*² go to meet the enemies of Christ!

Duke Philippe of Burgundy,⁵ renowned both for his courage and for his line, and equal to great kings in might and power, not only promises to go to war himself, but he also urges others to prepare for war.

² King Charles' attitude to the war against the Turks was actually quite ambiguous, if not directly negative

⁴ Alfonso V the Magnanimous (1396-1458): King of Aragon, Valencia, Majorca, Sardinia and Corsica, Sicily and Count of Barcelona from 1416, and King of Naples (as Alfonso I) from 1442 until his death

Both are aging and more than sixty years old, but nonetheless they offer to go to war, and they do not refuse to fight in person for their God. So, what should you do, Excellent Princes? Your age is perfect¹, your blood is young, and martial labours seem a joyful sport to you. Behold, Soldiers! Behold, Leaders! Behold, strong Youths! Will you allow old men to have greater courage than you? Will you sleep at home when they fight abroad? Will you be feeble and inert while they are strong and active? [50] [FV] For I myself, though burdened with age and dedicated to the Church, am burning and enflamed with enthusiasm for this war. Those peoples of old from whom you descend, Princes, when they were still pagan, considered no war as a burden if they fought for their country, and no death as misery if they died for their state. And what state is greater or better than our Christian Commonwealth? What country is more sweet or noble than our fatherland in Heaven, the beautiful Jerusalem, where we all want to go? When your forefathers died for their country, they really went into exile. But when we die, our exile ends and we enter our own country. Oh, happy death that ends earthly life and gives us eternal life instead. Oh, happy and desirable war in which you triumph on Earth if you win, and in Heaven if you lose.¹ Should we not fight with burning courage when we are promised such rewards?

[51] [FV] To all who go on this crusade, our Most Holy Lord, Pope Nicolaus V, supreme father of the Christians, pastor of the sheep of Christ, Roman Pontiff, successor of Peter, vicar of Christ our God, forgives their sins, cleanses their guilt, offers forgiveness, and promises Heaven.¹ There can be no doubt concerning this promise for he it is who has the power to bind and to loose,² and who holds the place of him to whom were given the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven.³ See, *the Heavens are opened!*⁴ Here is the way to your fatherland! Here is the ladder by which you can cross the spheres of the planets and reach the galaxy that takes you to Heaven. The Orator says that *all those who have preserved, aided, or enlarged their fatherland have a special place prepared for them in the heavens, where they may enjoy an eternal life of happiness.*⁵ So what should we think about you, Princes, when you will be striving to protect and extend the Christian religion and the mother church of all the faithful?

[52] [FV] What shall I say? It is enough to remember the words of the Apostle: *That eye hath not seen, nor ear heard: neither hath it entered into the heart of man, what things God hath prepared for them that love him.*¹ Germans nobles, no one will doubt your worth if for the sake of God's honour and out of love for him you take on this war that the emperor requests, the pope desires, and Christ commands.
