Henry of Rheinfeldia's collection of Quaestiones on Peter of Lombard's Sentences in Basel, Universitätsbibliothek A IX 92

Nadège CORBIÈRE (IRHT, Paris) *

Notebooks of medieval scholars, masters or students, are among the noteworthy sources to understand the teaching methods, the grading system and how medieval universities disseminated knowledge. In this respect, the manuscript Basel, Universitätsbibliothek, A IX 92<sup>1</sup> should be considered as a significant case study, mirroring some details of the history of the Faculty of Theology in Vienna. It contains a collection of theological distinctions gathered by Henry of Rheinfelden in Vienna sometime around 1400. The manuscript is like a compendium of distinctions on different topics from the Sentences of Peter Lombard.

The practice of reading the Sentences<sup>2</sup> was implemented in the new Faculty of Theology in Vienna following the model of the University of Paris.<sup>3</sup> Henry of Langenstein and Henry Totting of Oyta, the fathers of this faculty, were the first ones to promote this archetype in Vienna. The notes taken by Rheinfelden are unexplored documentations of Langenstein's and Oyta's teaching activity and actually capture the doctrinal trends they launched in Vienna.

This paper proposes to establish a tabula of the content of the manuscript Basel, Universitätsbibliothek, A IX 92, written around 1400 in Vienna by Henry of Rheinfelden himself. The description proposed by the online catalogue of Basel's library dates the manuscript from 1399–1400.<sup>4</sup> These dates match Reinfelden's career, since we know that he paid on August 1, 1398 to enrol for reading the Sentences and that in 1400 he was still a bacalareus formatus.<sup>5</sup>

The handwriting is exclusively that of Henry of Rheinfelden, and the authorship of the hand of the manuscript has been confirmed based on a parallel analysis with the other four manuscripts written by his hand and which are today in the library of Basel.<sup>6</sup>

The present codex is of small size (21x15 cm), has 151 folios, plus thirteen cedule of a smaller size than the regular pages of the manuscript. It's composed of nine quires, but it is possible that one quire has been lost, since the medieval numbering starts on the first folio with the number 13. The codex contains questions stemming from the Sentences of Peter Lombard, more precisely from Book II to Book IV. Since Book I is missing, except for a fragment-question on f. 13v, we can imagine that this volume could be Rheinfelden's second one on the Sentences.

The goal of the following transcription of the titles of the questions from this notebook was initially to provide the RISE's project team with a list of questions that would help to navigate and identify common contents with the other codices, copied in Vienna by Rheinfelden, which are Basel, UB, A VIII 17, A X 24, A X 44 and A X 73. At the same time, this collection of questions on the Sentences is an intriguing material stemming from the first years of teaching theology in Vienna and helps to identify the doctrinal interests at that stage among theologians.

On the nature of the text, it is hard to decide if we are dealing with an individual ‘commentary’<sup>7</sup> composed by Rheinfelden or if he just compiles a series of questions of other students or masters. We know that some of the questions are the work of Henry of Langenstein, since very often the attribution “h.h” is acknowledged. This monogram corresponds to an abbreviation of his name. Some others are from Henry Totting of Oyta, since they are attributed to “h.oy”. The two attributions, to ‘h.h’ and to ‘h.oy,’ are also very frequent in Basel, UB, A X 44 as a mark of Rheinfelden’s system of quoting. Among other sources, the codex refers to names such as Bonaventure, Thomas Aquinas, Richard of Middleton, Durandus of Saint-Pourçain or Robert Holcot who are the moderni or the canonical authors for Sentences questions. Some of the questions’ titles reiterate titles from authors like Alexandre of Hales, Gregory of Rimini or Denis of Montina, which might just be a matter of coincidence of them having the same titles. For example, in the case of Denis of Montina, on f. 19r we find the title of the distinction 26: Utrum gratia sit cuiuslibet meritorie actionis causa effectiva that can be read also as distinction 27 in Book II of Montina’s Sentences set of questions.<sup>8</sup> In some cases, Rheinfelden seems simply to summarize such sources. Although the title of the question is the same, the development is different, and a parallel reading of the two questions confirms that Montina is not a source for Rheinfelden. This suggests that, in the future, more investigations need to be done on the identification of the sources.

At the level of this survey and based on the explicit sources referred by Rheinfelden, one can understand that such-and-such author was the standard model in dealing with such-and-such topic. For example, distinction 35 (f. 86v) corresponds to Thomas of Aquinas’s Sentences, Book III, d. 35, q. 1, a. 4, qc. 2, or distinction 30 (f. 80v) reproduces Bonaventure’s Sentences on Book III, d. 33, q. 6. Further research would probably excavate more sources composing Rheinfelden’s notebook.

In order to understand the configuration of this set of questions and notes, I tried to follow the composition of the text. After the traditional division of Sentences into Books (II, III, IV), the text is divided in distinctions; under one distinction one can read a list of questions, always introduced by Utrum. The number of distinctions does not always follow the chronology of Peter Lombard’s Sentences, as one can see in the following table. This is especially the case for Book IV, in which we see some distinctions’ numbers several times: number two and number four are introduced three times, number seven two times, etc. This might suggest that, for the same distinction or the same doctrinal issue, Rheinfelden quotes two or three positions.

Rheinfelden does not deal with all of the distinctions—there should be 44 in the second book, but we only identify 33 in this manuscript. The reason could be that the first quire is missing but, instead, the lost quire probably contained distinctions 1 to 4, which are also missing. For the third book, the Sentences are divided in 44 distinctiones and, here, most of the first ones are missing. In the fourth book, there are supposed to be 50 distinctiones. In this codex, he does not mention distinctions 15 to 25. Therefore, he does not give argumentations of equal length for each distinction. First, he writes about them one by one, but then, from distinction 26, he created two groups, from 26 to 42, where he sometimes identifies the distinctions, and then from 43 to the end. The following table helps to note the chronology of the distinctions corresponding to Peter Lombard’s Sentences.

The third level of the structure is composed by several sets of questions that are listed under a numbered distinction. As is traditional for a corpus of Sentences's distinctiones,<sup>9</sup> another level of division inside the questions are the dubii and the conclusiones.

As I previously mentioned, the main goal of this paper is to provide some understanding of the content and of the connections that can be established between Henry of Rheinfelden's different notebooks. The first significant fact is the division of the manuscript Basel, UB, A X 92 in distinctions, following more or less those of Peter Lombard, and containing several questions. Although Basel, UB, A X 44 also gathers theological questions, they are not directly connected with the Sentences of Peter Lombard. In fact, the collection of questions from Basel, UB, A X 44 stem, in the majority of cases, from different academic practices, like principia, quaestiones aulares, quodlibeta and other disputed questions required in preparation for the Sentences reading. Therefore, the A IX 92 could in fact represent a transitional stage between a student's notebook, like the A X 44, and a commentary on the Sentences, which we do not have.

One more thing should be added here as a result of comparing Basel, UB A IX 92 with A X 44. The following four titles of questions are shared by both manuscripts:

1. Utrum Deus homo factus sit ex humana et divina naturis compositus. (Basel, UB, A IX 92, f. 49r; Basel, UB, A X 44, ff. 67r–69v)
2. Utrum intentio absque bonis operibus sufficiat ad merendum vitam eternam. (Basel, UB, A IX 92, f. 53r; Basel, UB, A X 44, ff. 45v–46r)
3. Utrum si status innocentie perseverasset Filius Dei incarnatus fuisset. (Basel, UB, A IX 92, f. 58v; Basel, UB, A X 44, ff. 100v–101v)
4. Utrum aliqua pura creatura potuerit satisfacere pro humana natura. (Basel, UB, A IX 92, f. 64r; Basel, UB, A X 44, ff. 13v–14r)

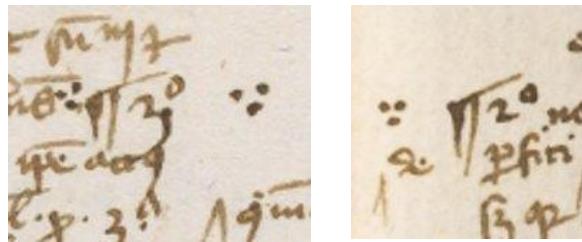

All four of these similar questions concern only the third book of the Sentences. When reading the answers to those questions, one actually realizes that they are different from the beginning of the answer, except for one question. On folio 58r of the A IX 92 and on folios 100v–101v of the Basel, UB, A X 44, the text is almost exactly the same for the first four lines of the A IX 92. There is no connection with the other manuscripts of Rheinfelden in the same library—the A VIII 17, A X 73.

A few more interesting features of this manuscript should be discussed. First of all, we can clearly see that the codex looks more like a student's notebook than a polished commentary on the Sentences. He writes indications such as: "In precedenti lectione circa materiam dubii tunc moti..." (f. 155v), so he refers to another lesson. He also writes a few times "vide in cedula interposita" (f. 83v), and there are indeed two cedulae right after this note. He also refers to other gatherings (sextornii) as on folio 161: "Contra istam conclusionem arguitur quere in principium alterius sextornii". These are interesting details that show the way Rheinfelden ordered his notes. He uses a complex system of functional indications to update his material with other passages or with new quotations. We could list a great number of signs that seem to become more and more sophisticated. Is it supposed to indicate passages that he inserted after the moment of the first draft? Or could it be for a more practical reason? The simple signs in fact point to the same folio and the complex ones to another folio. He could be using complex signs because they are more visible and easier to search.<sup>10</sup> Same type of signs are equally present all over the manuscript Basel, UB, A X 44.<sup>11</sup>

<sup>10</sup> For the utility and the use of these signs in medieval manuscripts, see M.L. AGATI, The Manuscript Book. A compendium of codicology, Roma 2009, pp. 292–293.

Another interesting detail is the fact that Rheinfelden mentions the name of James of Eltville (Jacobus de Alta Villa) a few times. Eltville was made master of theology in Paris in 1373 and then became the Abbot of Eberbach where he welcomed Henry of Langenstein, when the latter left Paris during the Big Schism<sup>12</sup>. The references to this authority are interesting because Rheinfelden perhaps got in contact with the name of this German Cistercian via Langenstein's teachings. Rheinfelden's text should therefore be considered as new evidence of how much consideration Eltville's texts had in the Viennese medieval milieu. This is probably a very early reference to him and we can deduce that Langenstein should be the one who introduced Eltville's doctrine and texts at the Vienna Faculty of Theology.<sup>13</sup> One of the quotations is quite suggestive about the high consideration that Langenstein had for Eltville, since he introduces him as follows:

“volo recitare aliqua dicta unius famosi doctoris moderni que nos movere debent ad penitentiam. Et circa hoc considerandus etiam erit modus agendi penitentiam, ubi est addendum secundum eum quod agentes penitentiam duo debent considerare, motivum scilicet et (sup. l.) modum. Motivum inducens ad agendum, modum regulantem ad bene peragendum penitentiam, motivum inducens ad agendum penitentiam, primum est tempus ad hoc deputatum. Quere in alio sexterno. Jacobus de Alta Villa (in marg.).”<sup>14</sup>

More evidence of James of Eltville's influence seems to be given by distinction 21 of Book II, listed by Rheinfelden at f. 39r under the title: Utrum primi parentes consentientes temptationi equaliter peccaverint peccato remissibili mortaliter, which coincides with question seven of Book II: Circa distinctionem 20am et 21am: Utrum primi parentes consentientes temptationi inequaliter peccaverunt peccato finite remissibili mortaliter, of the Sentences of <sup>12</sup> This episode of Langenstein's biography is depicted by C. Schabel in the introduction of The Cistercian James of Eltville († 1393). Author in Paris and Authority in Vienna, edited by M. BRÎNZEI, C. SCHABEL, (Studia Sententiarum, 3), Turnhout 2018, pp. 1–20.

<sup>13</sup> For the reception of Eltville within the Faculty of Theology from Vienna, see M. BRÎNZEI, I. CURUȚ, « From Author to Authority: The Legacy of James of Eltville in Vienna », in The Cistercian James of Eltville († 1393), ed. BRÎNZEI, SCHABEL, pp. 419–479.

James of Eltville.<sup>15</sup> It is worth concluding that these references to Eltville, collected by Henry of Rheinfelden, would be one of the earliest traces for James of Eltville's reception as an authority at the University of Vienna.

A last detail that merits attention is the presence of some questions stemming from the biblical commentary on the Psalms of Henry Totting of Oyta.<sup>16</sup> This text, one of the most important writings of Totting of Oyta seems to be extremely influential in Vienna and it is interesting to find questions from it mixed with discussions from the Sentences of Peter Lombard. This shows that not only the Sentences of Oyta were important in promoting theological teaching in Vienna, but also his commentary on the Psalms. To prove this statement, the following list gives the titles of the question as reproduced by Rheinfelden with a reference to Oyta's Psalms's commentary.<sup>17</sup>

Henry Totting of Oyta: Lectura sup. Psalterio, Ps. 37, q. 114, ed. Lang, p. 96.

Henry of Reinfelden: Book III, dist. 17, B f. 47v.

Utrum hec propositio sit concedenda Christus est creatura.

<sup>15</sup> This question is transmitted by 17 manuscripts of James of Eltville's Sentences. I will quote here, as an example, the codex Kolsterneburg, Augustiner-Chorherrenstift, Cod. 304, ff. 281r–283v. This codex contains fragments of Book II of the Sentences of James of Eltville and not of Henry of Langenstein. On the misattribution of Eltville's manuscripts, see: M. Henry of Reinfelden: Book IV, dist. 4, B f. 106v.

In order to bring an end to this presentation, it needs to be added that the evidence that we find looking to the division of the texts and the sources quoted explicitly and implicitly lead to the conclusion that this manuscript is a compendium of questions collected by Rheinfelden and certainly not his individual commentary on the Sentences. It is a valuable piece of evidence for the preparation in which a candidate with the title of magister should engage. Therefore, this notebook represents an important and very vivid source on the history of this faculty and on the ‘Vienna group’ style on reading the Sentences.
