

HAL
open science

Cultural expertise, hate speech, and the far right: the Slovak Mazurek case

Max Steuer

► To cite this version:

Max Steuer. Cultural expertise, hate speech, and the far right: the Slovak Mazurek case. Legal Pluralism and Critical Social Analysis, In press, pp.1-21. 10.1080/27706869.2024.2309790 . hal-04647221

HAL Id: hal-04647221

<https://hal.science/hal-04647221>

Submitted on 13 Jul 2024

HAL is a multi-disciplinary open access archive for the deposit and dissemination of scientific research documents, whether they are published or not. The documents may come from teaching and research institutions in France or abroad, or from public or private research centers.

L'archive ouverte pluridisciplinaire HAL, est destinée au dépôt et à la diffusion de documents scientifiques de niveau recherche, publiés ou non, émanant des établissements d'enseignement et de recherche français ou étrangers, des laboratoires publics ou privés.

Cultural Expertise, Hate Speech, and the Far Right: The Slovak Mazurek Case

Max Steuer^{ab}

^a*O.P. Jindal Global University, Sonipat, Haryana, India*

^b*Comenius University in Bratislava, Slovakia*

E-mail: ms2632@cantab.ac.uk

ORCID: <https://orcid.org/0000-0001-7638-5865>

Cultural Expertise, Hate Speech, and the Far Right: The Slovak Mazurek Case

Abstract: This article offers a case study of Slovakia focusing on the Mazurek case, the first criminal conviction of an incumbent Slovak far-right MP of hate speech. My explorative analysis uses data from my work as expert appointed by the investigation. It shows that cultural expertise in the Slovak hate speech cases involving prominent politicians has helped pinpoint the anti-minority narratives hidden behind the incriminated speech. The far right attempted to weaponize the legal process to cement their electoral base, raising the question of the mitigation strategies available to experts to counter this trend. The analysis points to the relevance of global legal pluralism not only in approaches to hate speech, but also regarding the interaction between the legal doctrine, the humanities and social sciences, and local legal regulation. The article concludes with positioning cultural expertise vis-à-vis global legal pluralism, whereby increased transparency of data from the proceedings and access to specialised training could mitigate the difficult position of cultural experts in hate speech.

Keywords: cultural expertise, expert witnesses, Slovakia/Slovak Republic, hate speech, far right

Introduction

To conclusively identify instances of hate speech – which is usually defined as extreme speech capable of inciting discrimination, hatred or violence (Weinstein and Hare 2009, 4; Pejchal 2020) – is a challenging task. The same speech act (understood broadly to encompass symbols as well) may be received very differently depending on the cultural background of the recipients and the communities they are embedded in. Furthermore, multiple actors – states, but also private platforms – advance their own approaches to hate speech and its regulation (Cammaerts 2009; Land 2020). While international legal regulation is significant, the “line drawing” in hate speech cases occurs first and foremost at the level of “national jurisdictions” (Land 2020, 993).

The importance of cultural contexts for the application of state-based legal norms, such as national regulations of hate speech, has been underscored by the theoretical lens of global legal pluralism (Berman 2020). Global legal pluralism calls for “culturally interpretive approaches to making decisive judgements about what exactly hate speech might be, at a particular moment and in a particular space”, which are particularly important in “societies that are transitioning to democracy” with comparatively greater risks of excessive speech restrictions (Stremlau and Gagliardone 2019, 386–87). Cultural experts (Holden 2019) can satisfy such calls, if they are sensitive to both local specificities and global developments in locating instances, and understanding the societal impacts of, hate speech.

In Central Europe after the fall of state socialism in 1989, legal restrictions on speech were generally softened. Yet, a “culture of rights”, in which the awareness and commitment to human rights is widespread, was not advanced with proactive measures, notably human rights education (Kusý 1994) or systematic reporting about human rights issues in the media (Farrell, Drywood, and Hughes 2019). This resulted in the increased prominence of extreme political actors in the public discourse (Přibáň and Sadurski 2007, 219). Proactive measures were missing in Slovakia, independent since 1993, as well. The presence of extreme political actors gave rise to hate speech litigation, with a potential for involving cultural experts. In 2016, the far-right People’s Party Our Slovakia (PPOS) led by Marian Kotleba gained parliamentary representation as the first party of its kind in Slovak history, and hate speech cases became more prominent. One of PPOS MPs, Milan Mazurek, with particularly vocal anti-minority sentiments, was charged with defamation of nation, race, and belief. Mazurek’s subsequent conviction resulted in the first instance of a Slovak MP losing his mandate due to a criminal conviction for hate speech.

In this article, via engaging with the Mazurek case, I contribute to studying the role of expert witnesses in hate speech cases and the consequences of their involvement for the experts themselves and for the dilemmas that their involvement is accompanied with. I conceptualise global legal pluralism as opening the space for a more dynamic view of the interaction between legal regulation and legal doctrine analysing it, and the social sciences that are the domain of the “non-legal experts”. Hate speech cases, particularly those involving political elites, attract the public’s attention, and as such represent a particularly useful case category for analysing the dilemmas of cultural expertise. Indeed, experts in these cases might get under increased public pressure and be vulnerable to charges of bias. Against this backdrop, I argue that, in Slovakia, where a comprehensive legal framework supporting specialised expert training and transparency about expert involvement in trials (cf. Petersen 2013, 317–18) is missing, far-right actors succeeded with weaponizing the legal process. In other words, they pursued their own political campaign by denouncing the expert witnesses, even at the expense of weakening their own legal positions as defendants.

I proceed as follows. Firstly, I review existing scholarship on expert witnessing focusing on the challenges of hate speech cases. Secondly, I introduce the Slovak Mazurek case as central for assessing the consequences of expert witness involvement in hate speech cases, and the method of contextual analysis, based on the first-hand account of my involvement as expert witness in this case. Then, I discuss the motivations for and consequences of expert witness’ involvement in Mazurek, during the pre-trial procedure and in the courtroom, demonstrating how the expert involvement itself was weaponized by the far-right actors. I conclude by outlining the avenues through which cultural expertise may mitigate the risk of the weaponization of the legal process.

The Scylla and Charybdis of Cultural Expertise in Hate Speech Cases

In democracies there is a need to adjudicate between various understandings of human rights as a core feature of legal pluralism, when understood as a descriptive concept capturing the reality of how law often operates in contemporary societies (Tamanaha 2021, 188–91). Legal pluralism underscores the significance of studying local regulation and practices in a global context (Darian-Smith 2022, 912), as in the case of global controversies on defining and pinpointing hate speech.

Cambridge historian Richard Evans acknowledges that in cases affecting the state of democracy, experts often face a tension between their “two hats” – that of an unbiased reporter of facts and that of a citizen who is concerned about the danger of certain acts in a democracy. Still, he recognises a duty to provide the expert opinion which often brings scholarly discoveries in their own right (Evans 2002, 342–43). Evans speaks from experience: he prepared an expert testimony in Irving v. Penguin Books Limited, Deborah E. Lipstadt (see Lipstadt 1994), where Lipstadt and her publisher were accused of libelling Irving by claiming that he is a Holocaust denier. The court needed to adjudicate whether Irving distorted historical facts, and found that such distortion indeed occurred (Irving v. Penguin Books Limited, Deborah E. Lipstadt 2000).

In cases concerning restrictions on speech,¹ the tension between the expert striving for objectivity and the expert as a concerned citizen is apparent for two reasons. The first is their societal relevance. If a particular instance of hate speech in a jurisdiction criminalising such speech is not subject to prosecution, the law exerts a legitimising effect on the speech act; the speakers can claim that their speech passed legal scrutiny because no indictment was issued. Secondly, in these cases it is particularly complicated to establish a clear-cut distinction between the law and the facts. Invoked with quotation marks (Molnár 2012) or (in this article) in italics to highlight its ambiguity, scholarly controversies surrounding hate speech mirror the struggles of investigators, prosecutors and courts. Evaluating the contextual characteristics of speech requires the awareness of historical, sociological, political, and even psychological factors, which goes beyond the usual capacities of public institutions, often with limited resources for specialised staff. If coupled with relatively scarce legal precedents, poor awareness of social diversity, changes in the regulatory framework governing hate speech cases and the general lack of its clarity (Belavusau 2013), and intensive media and public interest in cases involving societal elites, the challenge that these institutions face in delivering well-reasoned decisions, is apparent.

As per a standard account, expert testimonies must assist the courts on the appraisal of evidence, reserving the legal regulation to the judges, which could be interpreted as reaffirming the “ideology of legal centralism” (Griffiths 1986, 4). “Legal centralism” places state law and the state institutions enacting, implementing and applying it hierarchically above all other sources of law. Here, the judges, as representatives of the state in this context, have access to legal interpretation, in contrast to experts who may bring in perspectives from a wider range of disciplines. This discomfort with experts referring to legal regulation in their reports and testimonies may explain why experts with some background in law tend to explicitly avoid engaging with the law (Baker 1991, emphasis added).² In hate speech cases, however, I argue that the contextual analysis cannot ignore the positive law, as the extent of legal restrictions on speech gives rise to specific expectations from the constituency which is bound by these rules (Kniffka 2007, 140). For example, if the law prohibits certain kinds of expressions, society might expect that the authors of such expressions would face legal consequences, and is less motivated to engage in counter-speech as an alternative form of response. As a result, the analysis of the contexts of the speech requires the engagement with the law as one of several drivers of human behaviour (Friedman 2016). Such an engagement may help the quality of the justification of the decision of the public authority. At the same time, it blurs the distinction between “academic” and “legal” arguments (Burns 2008; Jasanoff 1997, 1–11) and increases the risks that the expertise will be challenged.

Expert witness' involvement in high-profile hate speech may place the expert witness between Scylla and Charybdis. By not getting involved in the case, the expert might decrease the quality of the decision-making process, whereas their involvement might result in the exploitation of the expert testimony for partisan purposes. High-profile cases are particularly challenging for cultural experts due to the risk of unwillingly boost partisan actors, as discussed in existing literature. Some prominent politicians, such as Turkish President Erdoğan (Heper and Toktaş 2003, 169–73) or the leader of the Dutch Freedom Party Geert Wilders (Noorloos 2014, 256–58) have a history of prosecutions for hate speech in their respective jurisdictions. Rekker and van Spanje (2022) showed how such prosecutions may lead to undermining the support for the democratic system. However, they did not consider whether and how the expert witness' involvement might influence the reception of such prosecutions by the society. Wilson (2016, 742) examined expert witness' involvement in international criminal trials, discovering that “in speech-crimes trials, interpretive approaches to language and cultural meaning are preferred over statistical analyses”, and explained this preference with the threatening effect that quantitative approaches have to judicial authority.³ Wilson's claim underscores the importance of studying cultural expertise in hate speech cases involving prominent public figures.

The impact of hate speech trials and the role of cultural experts therein is particularly important in Central Europe. Spearheaded by Hungary and followed (at least until the 2023 elections) by Poland, democracy is under pressure in the region (e.g. Ágh 2022; Pech and Scheppele 2017), which might encourage illiberal actors in other countries such as Slovakia to follow suit. Ineffective responses to hate speech in general, and the manipulation of cultural expertise, in particular, are both likely to further erode democracy. My interdisciplinary socio-legal analysis (Banakar and Travers 2005, 2–6) unpacks the dilemmas of expert involvement and its consequences in high-profile hate speech trials. It highlights how, from the perspective of far-right actors, the reward in the form of increased electoral support gained via weaponization of the legal process, might outweigh the perspective of an acquittal. I argue for an increased awareness of the potential risks of the involvement of social scientists with law, which should nevertheless not translate into abstention but rather into the adoption of measures for risk mitigation.

Selecting and Studying the Slovak Mazurek Case

Slovakia has a history of anti-minority stances presented by its political elites, some of which have persisted after its accession to the European Union (see Malová and Dolný 2016). The Roma, who are underrepresented in the public discourse and in politics, are a typical target of discrimination and even violence (e.g. Donert 2017; Holt 2020). Thus, statements highlighting their “otherness” or “subordinate status” in the society feed into ingrained societal prejudices and may have particularly denigrating effects.

Far-right actors have used these sentiments strategically to gain electoral support. In 2013, Marian Kotleba was elected as chairman of one of the eight Slovak higher administrative districts. Kotleba had previously been involved in a political movement banned by the Supreme Court of Slovakia (3SŽ/79/2005 2006) as an organisation attempting to overthrow democracy. In another case concerning hate speech in his campaign in the 2013 elections for higher administrative districts, no expert testimony was included (4Tdo/49/2012 2013). Here, the Supreme Court mainly determined that it does not violate the content-based ban on hate speech in the Slovak criminal code’s (2005) when Kotleba in his 2009 manifesto advocated for abolition of “unjust favoritism of not only Gypsy parasites”. Despite the 2013 success, however, Kotleba remained on the margins of public attention until his unexpected success in the 2016 general elections, which coincided with the rise of electoral support for the far right during the 2015-2016 “refugee crisis” across Europe. While Slovakia remains a democracy, its politics has become highly polarised (Mesežnikov and Gyárfášová 2018). Between 2016–2021, Kotleba’s popularity was relatively high: he ranked fourth in the 2019 presidential elections, despite competing against another anti-establishment candidate (Haughton, Rybář, and Deegan-Krause 2019).

After the 2016 Slovak elections, new legislation reduced the burden of proof on the prosecution required to prove a hate speech offence. Furthermore, it empowered the National Criminal Agency (NCA) to investigate extremist offences instead of the regular police (Ministry of Interior of the Slovak Republic 2018). The parliamentary majority sent a clear signal that it considers hate speech a source of societal concern, and the law as an optimal cure for it (see Žitňanská 2016). The legal relevance of this signal was virtually unquestioned at least until the Constitutional Court of Slovakia (PL. ÚS 5/2017 2019) struck down some of the extensions of the grounds for prosecution of hate speech as incompatible with constitutional guarantees of free speech.

The investigators at the NCA resorted to cultural expertise in several of the post-2016 Slovak hate speech cases. Three high-profile prosecutions against Kotleba’s MPs (including Kotleba himself) are particularly interesting since they originated after the legislative extension of criminal sanctions against hate speech. The change of the competence allocation of hate speech cases within the Slovak police was combined with the positive verbal signals towards prosecution sent by the parliamentary majority when approving the enhanced restrictions of hate speech. Both tendencies supported more prosecutions.

One of the cases concerns Marian Kotleba who issued cheques in the value of 1488 euros supporting selected families in need. The sum is composed of the symbols fourteen and eighty-eight that have a specific place in extreme right symbolic language (Virchow 2017, 635; see also Maková 2019). The prosecution and the court instructed several expert witnesses, respectively, including several historians and a political scientist. Kotleba questioned the credibility of some of them in terms of their expertise (see Kysel' 2020a). The Supreme Court affirmed Kotleba's conviction in April 2022, as a result of which Kotleba lost his mandate in the Slovak parliament (Steuer 2023, 161–62). In the second case, MP Stanislav Mizík was accused of publishing a statement on Facebook that denounced two recipients of presidential state honors because of their Jewish origin (Kysel' 2017). The Supreme Court affirmed Mizík's acquittal as it was not proven without reasonable doubt that he personally authored the statement (2To/13/2018 2019). The prosecution instructed another historian as expert witness (Šnidl 2018) but this involvement was not even mentioned in the final verdict.

Mazurek was the third publicly well visible case after the 2016 elections. Here, for the first time in modern Slovak history, a far-right MP was convicted for hate speech and lost his seat due to the constitutional prohibition of convicted individuals to sit in parliament. Milan Mazurek, elected on the PPOS party list as the youngest MP in the 2016 election, presented anti-Roma statements in a regional broadcast that was subsequently published in an online archive. In this speech, Mazurek discussed the "solutions" to the "Gypsy question", highlighting the problem of the "Gypsy terror in Eastern Slovakia". He had asserted that "Gypsies who go to special schools [...] were supposed to go to school with children from normal, decent families" (emphasis added). He also argued that "Gypsies" should not be taught computer skills or dance and that the investments in social housing "to people who will not bring us anything in the future" need to be reduced (see Ryšavý 2017; 4T/36/2017 2018, 36). The charges for these and other statements in the speech were brought despite the fact that, just a few months earlier, the authorities refused to proceed against Mazurek in relation to a statement published on his private Facebook account conveying: "I do not defend any regime but we only know lies and fairy tales about the Third Reich concerning the six million and the soaps made of Jews. Just lies are taught about Hitler". The justification by the police was that the phrase "I do not defend any regime" served as a sufficient proof that Mazurek had not incited to discrimination, hatred or engaged in Holocaust denial (Dugovič 2016). This failed charge showed the limits of authorities investigating speech without contextual sensitivity, and fueled the far-right's activity.

I analyse the Mazurek case in which I was involved as expert witness. My own role as expert witness, as well as someone taking “an active part in the whole process of the construction of academic knowledge including the collection, analysis, and dissemination of findings” (Holden and Tortora 2017, 100), offers a unique perspective on the involvement of cultural expertise in hate speech cases. When analysing the Mazurek case, I go beyond surveying selected judicial decisions that, alone, face limitations in capturing the involvement of cultural expertise (Campbell 2020, 48), and include ethnographic data from my own involvement in the proceedings. This case provides empirical evidence of the troublesome implementation of content-based prohibitions of hate speech (Heinze 2016; Steuer 2019) and invite for the democratisation of cultural expertise: in high-profile cases, where the expert witness becomes a subject of public interest, it is beneficial to provide public access to the original products of their work instead of relying only on indirect interpretations of proceedings with limited transparency. Such transparency may offset the efforts towards weaponization of the legal process by the far right.

The recounting of my role as expert witness in the Mazurek case cannot aim for “objectivity” in the classic sociological sense (Weber 1978, 52). Nevertheless, it offers a reflection of an expert on “local” knowledge in a specific social setting (Lynch 1994, 131–33, 309–15).

Background and the Pre-Trial Procedure: The Role of the Police

The extension of grounds for prosecution of hate speech in Slovakia was accompanied by an operational change in the jurisdiction of law enforcement. Before the changes, the police was criticised for its reluctance to press charges against politicians who had disseminated hate speech (e.g. Benčík 2017). The legal changes shifted the handling of these cases (see Table 1) to the competence of the NCA and the special prosecution. Furthermore, the Special Prosecution Office became responsible for indictments in cases where the investigators found sufficient evidence to proceed.

Table 1 Overview of crimes of extremism in Slovakia¹

Year	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023
Total number of cases identified	78	66	30	58	145	159	85	115	78	68	68

Source: Ministry of Interior of the Slovak Republic (2023).

Endnote to Table 1: The numbers refer to the category of “extremist offences” that consist of hate speech (see the list of offences in Steuer 2019, 187). Incitement cases such as the one of Mazurek’s are rather rare, they used to be treated under §424a (“incitement, defamation and threatening to persons because of their affiliation to race, nation, nationality, complexion, ethnic group or family origin”) and have summarily been covered under §424(1). No separate statistics concerning cases involving candidates or members for the PPOS are available (see also European Commission against Racism and Intolerance (2020) on the lack of disaggregated statistics in the Slovak case). Most of the cases have not been reported by the media and can be considered as offences by private persons with low political salience. The 2023 statistics only consider data until the end of November. The focus on the cases involving MPs is justified by their high public visibility, which endows them with the potential to frame the public perception of the state authorities’ responses to instances of hate speech in general.

The NCA started to use a new software to detect online hate speech (Pacherová and Vavrová 2017). A new expert witness subject area called “Social Sciences” was created, including the subfield of “political extremism” (Ministry of Justice of the Slovak Republic 2018). A combination of stringent requirements resulted in only two expert witnesses having been registered in the official database of the Ministry of Justice (one more expert on “religious extremism” has been added in March 2021). Consequently, ad hoc expert witnesses were needed. They were likely chosen based on their public scholarship and media appearances.

This development resembles that in Czechia, the closest neighbouring jurisdiction to Slovakia due to historical (Kühn 2011, 21–64) and language affinities. In Czechia, as early as in 2007 there were discussions on dealing with hate speech cases with the help of cultural expertise, for example, pertaining to the performances of far right music bands (Mareš 2015, 77). Consequently, a specialised expert witness subfield was created. Miroslav Mareš, the first of these expert witnesses, recalls that requests for testimonies were frequently made in cases where there was not much an expert could add (Mareš 2015). The high demand for his services coupled with threats from the authors of the criminalised speech ultimately led Mareš (2015) to cease his activities as expert witness. In 2021, four expert witnesses were featured in a database run by the Ministry of Justice of the Czech Republic (2021); one formerly enlisted expert resigned due to discriminatory remarks in one case.⁴ In 2016, a Czech expert witness argued that “in Slovakia expert witnessing is entirely absent, case law is almost non-existent and publications and scientific activities are rare” (Svoboda 2016, 95). The analogies between the institutional development in the two countries are hardly a coincidence: Czechia seems to have provided inspiration for Slovak policymakers.

Three months after the amendment of the Slovak criminal legislation took effect, I was approached by a police investigator to provide a written expert testimony in the Mazurek case. I was instructed as an ad hoc, unregistered expert witness (§ 15, Act No. 382/2004 Coll. 2019), and requested to deliver a report and later appear at the oral court hearing as well. I had written on hate speech in newspaper articles and reports available online (e.g. Steuer 2016) which the investigators might have read. These writings, developed in academic papers (Steuer 2017; 2019), were critical towards the extended restrictive framework in dealing with hate speech in Slovakia. As such, they differed from some other experts' positions at the time (Bihariová 2016; Milo 2016), and indicated that I would be carefully considering the significance of the freedom of speech of the defendant, a far-right politician, in my analysis. My case articulates an individual dilemma, marked by the responsibility to provide expertise in the service of democracy (which may also manifest in the form of defending public discourse against pseudoscientific arguments) versus the risks of the testimony legitimising those who wish to undermine just that regime. However, I anticipated the risk that my position might be manipulated in a trial that was likely to be mediated.

The letter of instruction consisted of four questions, linked to the debate with Mazurek from 2 October 2016 that unfolded in the "Frontinus" radio channel. The first question requested to "analyse thoughts and ideas (also from a historical point of view), which were disseminated during the live transmission of the ['Frontinus' debate], in relation to a group of persons of a particular ethnic background (in this case Roma background)". The second question requested to "comment, whether the speech or its part, in relation to a group of persons of [Roma background] was capable to trigger a particular mood, or decision, among the listeners, and specify, if so". The third question asked to "analyse the content and form of realisation of the speech with reference to the right of the 'speaker' to freedom of expression (for instance, according to Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR))". The last question invited to note "other facts as discovered via the analysis". The third question explicitly established the connection between the factual circumstances of the case and the background of the legal regulation. In hindsight, however, this question can be seen as overstepping the boundaries between the "legal" and the "factual", and the contextual analysis could have been conducted without a reference to a legal provision in the question itself. Still, regardless of whether the questions contain references to regulation, when the expert statement includes references to legal regulation as part of the contextual analysis, the judge may perceive it as encroaching on their role and lead them to discard the expertise on grounds that it touches at questions of law. I may have requested a reformulation of this question to reduce the risk of such challenges, though they cannot be eliminated completely in cultural expertise in hate speech cases.

My written statement (National Criminal Agency of Slovakia 2017b) was followed by the decision of the police to submit an indictment and, subsequently, a complaint by the defendant.⁵ The engagement with questions of law was a prominent critique among those challenging the expert statement. Another claim disputed my expertise due to (1) my educational qualifications and (2) my specialisation. Among others, the defendant disputed my graduate degree⁶ obtained at the Central European University in Budapest. The defendant did so despite the fact that the degree had been recognised in Slovakia, and noted that “[the] founder [of the CEU] is a Hungarian-American billionaire George Soros [and] Hungarian PM Viktor Orbán claims that George Soros wants to influence Hungarian politics through his foundation” (National Criminal Agency of Slovakia 2017a, 3–4). These positions of the Hungarian PM are known to be tied to conspiracy theories (Krekó and Enyedi 2018, 47–50). As it had become clear during the trial, this narrative was intended more to the supporters of MP Mazurek than to the judge, and were deployed even at the price of weakening the defendant’s legal position. The public hearing which was covered by the media provided Mazurek for even more publicity and opportunity to strengthen electoral support.

At the Court: Allies, Adversaries, and the Campaign of the Far Right

Experts in courts are routinely accused to be hired guns by the party that receives the expertise as adverse to its hoped legal outcome. However, I argue that in the context of far-right communication strategists, cultural expertise finds itself in a Scylla-and-Charybdis-like situation. Regardless of the verdict of the expert testimony, extreme political actors can frame it to boost their own electoral support. If the expert testimony does not establish a causal determination between the speech and some detrimental effects on the society, far-right actors can use expert authority to emphasise the normalcy and even the desirability of that speech. Far-right actors can also de-legitimise the procedure as biased by alleging that the expert witness is a “servant” of the prosecution. This strategy is common in the legal process but is taken to the extreme by far-right politicians who are ready to even incur a higher sentence, because the length of the appeal process, combined with media attention, create an opportunity that is strategically worth pursuing.

During the Mazurek hearing held in front of a single judge of the Specialised Criminal Court on 26-27 February 2018, such an anti-expert narrative was brought into play by Kotleba’s supporters. The PPOS argued that the trial has become a political one where, Kotleba as a martyr of democracy were sacrificed on the altar of a police state (Uhrík 2018). Moreover, they compared it to the manipulated trials of authoritarian Czechoslovakia (1948–1989), in which dissident voices were prosecuted (see Pešek 2013). The PPOS presented me as a friend of the special prosecutor (whom I had never met before the hearing). They also claimed that the label of extreme right, a term that was routinely used in relation to the PPOS (Mesežnikov and Gyárfášová 2018),⁷ indicates my personal bias. At the end of the hearing, Mazurek himself, assuming my Jewish origin based on my (in Slovakia uncommon) surname, alleged my bias due to a supposedly increased sensitivity to critical statements.⁸ While the objection was rejected by the judge upon the special prosecutor’s request, and weakened the position of the defendant for being discriminatory,⁹ it was featured prominently in the reporting about the hearing (SITA 2018). Given the requirement of confidentiality, I felt compelled to decline to provide my perspective to the media (including an interview request on the case I had received from a journalist), and so I could not help shift the public attention more to the content of the expert report and testimony.

The discreditation of the expert allowed the PPOS to shift the discussion away from the content and impact of the MP's statements. The effort to accomplish this shift could also explain why the defendant did not publicise the instruction of their own expert witness who opposed my responses but, according to the Specialised Criminal Court as reported in the judgment of the Supreme Court, justified his position "only at a general level", as a result of which the Specialised Criminal Court "was not convinced by [this] report" (2To/10/2018 2019, 4).

Mazurek lost the case. In September 2019, the Supreme Court of Slovakia (2To/10/2018 2019, 23) confirmed the first-instance judgment of the Specialised Criminal Court. It even increased the financial sanction from 5000 € (imposed by the Specialised Criminal Court) to 10000 €. The Court stressed that my expert statement was relevant in terms of the legal-philosophical, sociological, ethical and political science analysis. Yet, the judgement also argued that Mazurek's statement were obviously insulting, rancorous and inciting hatred, and hence the conclusion so evident that it did not even require expertise (2To/10/2018 2019, 22). Thus, the judgement did not fully acknowledge the investigators' claim that expert testimony was necessary.

Despite losing in court, the case proved beneficial to Mazurek's public profile among his followers and helped him to gain recognition for a while as one of the prime Slovak far-right politicians.¹⁰ Mazurek made it clear immediately after the ruling that the only real punishment for him is the expulsion from parliament (Ľudová strana Naše Slovensko 2019a). In February 2020, Mazurek regained his seat as the PPOS received 7.97 % of the popular vote and Mazurek personally gained 65,921 preferential votes of the 229,660 votes for PPOS. His campaign slogans entailed "Fired from parliament for expressing an opinion" (German Sirotnikova 2020). In January 2021, PPOS experienced a split, with some of its prominent MPs forming a competing movement which outperformed PPOS in the polls by 2022. While the new party narrowly failed to cross the five per cent threshold in the September 2023 elections, especially due to the move of the dominant party (Smer-SD of Robert Fico) to the far right, MP Mazurek has remained the Vice President of the movement (Republika 2023) and retained popularity. Also in 2021, after the Mazurek case was decided, the division of the special prosecution tasked specifically with crimes against extremism was merged with the one focusing on organised crime and terrorism, raising concerns over reduced attention to hate speech cases (Kováč 2022). Existing evidence does not suffice to evaluate the impact of this change. In 2020, before the change, a new investigation was launched against Mazurek, this time due to his (highly popular but later deleted) social media post in which he falsely claimed that a 22-year old armed attacker at a Slovak school who killed the deputy headmaster and injured several pupils and school employees was of Roma origin (Kysel' 2020b).

While Mazurek appears to have partly succeeded to weaponize the legal process and undermine my involvement as expert witness to gain electoral support, in my view, expert witness involvement in hate speech cases with political elites remains useful, for two reasons. Firstly, when restrictions on speech are in place, prosecution is unavoidable, and expert involvement will provide specialised knowledge which assist the decision making authorities in the assessment of the evidence. Secondly, the expert testimony enables important observations pertaining to local contexts to be made public. In Mazurek, these were (1) the mechanism of othering¹¹ at work in the MP's statements, (2) the analogies to anti-pluralist ideologies of the twentieth century such as Nazism or communism, and (3) the pseudo-scientific nature of claims presented in a publication by Mazurek's parliamentary assistant (Surmánek 2014), to which Mazurek had referred as a scientific authority. In sum, expert testimonies have the potential to critically engage with hate speech while being attentive to local specificities, even though the media did not focus on the insights brought about by the testimony and personalised the expert witness involvement on this occasion.

In my view, in this case it was impossible to escape both Scylla and Charybdis of cultural expertise without compromising the goal of an analytical perspective that enhances the quality of judicial deliberation. My refusal to act as expert witness in the Mazurek case would have been unlikely to prevent MP Mazurek from boosting electoral support, because he was ready to sacrifice the outcome of the trial for increasing his political success. Other expert witnesses with longer experience, as well as some prosecutors, faced similar attacks in Slovakia. In contrast, when the Supreme Court declined the attorney general's petition to dissolve the PPOS (4Volpp/1/2017 2019; see also Steuer 2022), Kotleba portrayed the judges deciding on the petition as showing an "act of personal bravery" by deciding "exclusively on the basis of the law" (Ľudová strana Naše Slovensko 2019b), underscoring the flexibility with which the far right can frame various actors from the proceedings as enemies or allies for their electoral base.

I argue that, given the inevitable publicity in hate speech cases with prominent political actors, pro-democratic stakeholders should, instead of trying to escape it, work towards the development of a more transparent institutional framework that maximises critical engagement with cultural expertise by multiple actors. This could be facilitated by allowing the expert to speak publicly about the case, at the level of summarising their involvement (report, testimony) from their perspective, to the extent the materials are publicly available in any case (e.g. through public court proceedings). Furthermore, training in the interdisciplinary and cross-jurisdictional legal framework of cultural expertise should be available to maximise the impact of the specialised knowledge experts contribute with in the proceedings. Training can benefit also from being enhanced by experiences from other jurisdictions, thus exposing learners to a richer set of experiences from varied local contexts. Last but not least, experts themselves should not be "reluctant to talk about" their experience in public (Kniffka 2007, 141), while being mindful of the local legal regulation on confidentiality and privacy.

Discussion: Trade-offs of Cultural Expertise in Hate Speech Cases

As illustrated by the Slovak Mazurek case, cultural experts may have a difficult time communicating about the cases due to the requirement of confidentiality. Once the parties start to question the experts' credibility, media attention easily shifts away from the content of the expert testimony to the profiles of the expert witnesses, without utilising the potential of the expert testimony to counter the delegitimisation efforts by the far-right political actors with evidence-based arguments. Expert witnesses may find themselves in between Scylla and Charybdis, between refusing to provide expertise and their testimony having unintended consequences including shifting the attention from the content of the speech to the profile of the expert and be manipulated to the support for the extreme political actors. This is the paradox of, on the one hand, exclusion of specialised knowledge, and a likely impoverished understanding of the speech act detrimental to democracy in the longer term; and, on the other hand, the risk that cultural expertise might give indirect ammunition to the originators of hate speech and cement their narrative as "true democrats" fighting against an oppressive regime (cf. Cammaerts 2009, 570). There are no ideal options in such a situation.

Furthermore, the Mazurek case indicates the following trade-off of cultural expertise in hate speech cases in transitional regimes. The weaponization of the legal process by extreme political actors begets the role of expert witnesses beyond the court case. The requirement of confidentiality limits the expert witnesses' public engagement. Expert witnesses become subject of public interest nonetheless, and since the results of their analysis cannot be divulged, able manipulators can shift the attention to their personal background and away from the case at hand. This is undesirable since the distinctive contribution of the expert witness in hate speech cases rests precisely in the analysis of the discursive constructions of hate speech with the help of interpretive social science, thereby explaining whether and if so, why the speech act amounted to incitement in the given context. Through shifting public attention to the personal background of the expert, the effort to shed light on the often complex and subtle narratives constructed in hate speech by anti-pluralist political actors is sidelined. Holden (2022) argues that experts who position themselves as procedurally neutral whilst maintaining a degree of critical affirmation can secure an authoritative role within the legal process. This article suggests that in the context of hate speech in transitional regimes, a position of critical affirmation might require that when cultural experts become a subject of public interest and there is a risk of undue manipulation of their expertise in the public sphere, to the point of unduly impacting the legal process, to mitigate this phenomenon, the content of the testimony and its discussion need to become public too and this transparency will assist the decision-making process. Hence, there is a need for decision-makers to work towards the development of a more transparent institutional framework that maximises critical engagement with cultural expertise by multiple stakeholders. Of course, this does not mean that all requirements of confidentiality should be altogether removed. For example, if the expert gets access to some sensitive information from the personal life of the far-right political actor during the proceeding, that has no bearing on the report and testimony, confidentiality still applies in relation to that information.

The dilemmas of expert witness involvement in the Mazurek case give rise to several questions for further research. One pertains to the identification of the expert in hate speech cases. There is no specialised discipline that would be required to be focused on by expert witnesses on “political extremism” or “religious extremism”; the subject area of focus matters. Thus, experts hail from history, sociology, political science, linguistics, psychology or related disciplines. If they engage with the “social science of hate”, even a legal background might be suitable for building expertise on the subject. The expectation here is that the expert has engaged with and produced scholarship on questions pertaining to extremism and is familiar with its local developments. Inter- and multi-disciplinarity helps develop sensitivity towards a contextual assessment of speech when competing narratives prevail in the public sphere and the effects of particular content on diverse individuals and groups may differ (Temperman 2011). In other words, global legal pluralism invites litigators and adjudicators to advance their openness towards interdisciplinarity as well.

Secondly, the case underscores the dilemma of expert involvement in hate speech cases. The legitimisation of far-right politics unfolds through narrative constructions in which expertise epitomises an ideological position going against the “ordinary people”, among them supporters of the far right. Experts have only limited options to counter these narratives. Ethnomethodological studies of interactions between different legal professions have recognised the importance of language and narratives (Dupret 2016, 1–4; Garfinkel 2003, 105; Manzo 2016). Berard’s study of hate crime litigation in the US (as a “socio-legal construct”) focuses more narrowly on hate speech, but cultural expertise is not at the center of its attention.¹² Studying further expert testimonies in hate speech may contribute to identifying effective mitigation strategies towards the far right’s attempts to gain support for their actions through selective referencing to expert testimonies. Such studies benefit from gaining the experience of expert witnesses, who operate “from within the cultivated system of competency that is particular (‘unique’)” (Dupret, Lynch, and Berard 2015, 10 referring to Garfinkel). More cases could also uncover whether the demand for cultural expertise in politically salient hate speech cases has been met with the appointment of expert witnesses.

Conclusion

Determining what counts as hate speech requires an inherently contextual assessment. Cultural experts can offer such an assessment, while paying due regard to the norms of the targeted as well as receiving communities of the speech act (Renteln 2004, 211–19). Such an application focuses scholarly attention on the complex relationship between the norms of democracy, the rights of minorities targeted by hate speech, and the strategies of antidemocratic actors operating within the system used to boost their electoral support (also) via campaigning against cultural expertise via presenting competing interpretations of human rights. In this article, the concept of cultural expertise was applied to the Slovak legal process for the first time, capturing the dynamics surrounding the inclusion of cultural expertise and discussing the consequences of expert witness involvement in the first Slovak case of an MP expelled from parliament for hate speech.

I have shown that global legal pluralism, when understood as the blurring of boundaries between the legal doctrine and the social sciences in legal proceedings, underscores the need for cultural experts to adopt an interdisciplinary, contextual approach in analysing speech acts. This way, cultural expertise provides specialised information to assist the decision-making process with a more rigorous evaluation of evidence, that allow the case outcomes to be better received by the society. However, global legal pluralism amplifies challenges regarding the positionality of the expert, in particular the traditional requirement for the expert not to address questions of law, and may facilitate the weaponization of the legal process in which expert witness involvement is easily undermined for partisan purposes. In the Slovak Mazurek case, a battle for the societal perceptions of criminal legal regulation and its application ensued, with cultural expertise and cultural experts centre-stage in it.

Acknowledgements: This article is funded by COST (European Cooperation in Sciences and Technology) Action 22101 led by Livia Holden. Earlier versions of this article benefitted from comments by the participants of the Free Speech in the 21st Century online conference (2020), the ECPR General Conference 2020 (Standing Group on Law and Courts), the international workshop on Cultural Expertise and Litigation: Practices in South Asia and Europe held at the Jindal Global Law School (2022), and the anonymous reviewers. The valuable insights of the editor of the special collection and the Journal as well as of several expert witnesses in hate speech cases whom I interviewed while preparing this manuscript are highly appreciated. All online sources were accessible as of 1 February 2022. Developments until 30 November 2023 are considered. The usual disclaimer applies.

Disclosure statement

No potential conflict of interest was reported by the author.

References

- Ágh, Attila. 2022. 'The Third Wave of Autocratization in East-Central Europe'. Journal of Comparative Politics 15 (2): 72–87.
- Baker, Thomas E. 1991. 'The Impropriety of Expert Witness Testimony on the Law'. University of Kansas Law Review 40:325–64.
- Banakar, Reza, and Max Travers. 2005. 'Law, Sociology and Method'. In Theory and Method in Socio-Legal Research, edited by Reza Banakar and Max Travers, 1–25. Oxford: Hart Publishing.
- Belavusau, Uladzislau. 2013. Freedom of Speech: Importing European and US Constitutional Models in Transitional Democracies. London: Routledge.
- Benčík, Ján. 2017. Vyhrážali sa mi obesením aj dobodaním, ochranu som odmietol [They Threatened Me with Hanging and Stabbing, I Declined Security] Interview by Miroslav Kern. <https://dennikn.sk/685272/bloger-jan-bencik-vyhrazali-sa-mi-obesenim-aj-dobodanim-ochranku-som-odmietol/>.
- Berman, Paul Schiff. 2020. 'Understanding Global Legal Pluralism: From Local to Global, From Descriptive to Normative'. In The Oxford Handbook of Global Legal Pluralism, edited by Paul Schiff Berman, 1–35. Oxford: OUP.
- Bihariová, Irena. 2016. 'Dag Daniš sa mylí. Protiextremistická novela nás posúva vpred [Dag Daniš Is Wrong. The Anti-Extremist Amendment Is a Step Forward]'. Denník N (blog). 26 October 2016. <https://dennikn.sk/blog/593165/dag-danis-sa-myli-protiextremisticka-novela-nas-posuva-vpred/>.
- Burns, Stacy Lee. 2008. 'Demonstrating "Reasonable Fear" at Trial: Is It Science or Junk Science?' Human Studies 31 (2): 107–31.
- Cammaerts, Bart. 2009. 'Radical Pluralism and Free Speech in Online Public Spaces: The Case of North Belgian Extreme Right Discourses'. International Journal of Cultural Studies 12 (6): 555–75. <https://doi.org/10.1177/1367877909342479>.
- Campbell, John R. 2020. 'Interrogating the Role and Value of Cultural Expertise in Law'. Laws 9 (4): 29–52. <https://doi.org/10.3390/laws9040029>.
- Criminal Code of the Slovak Republic*. 2005. <http://www.legislationline.org/documents/section/criminal-codes>.
- ČTK. 2016. 'Soud zrušil trest pro advokáta, který upozorňoval na židovský původ znalce [Court Abolished Penalty for Lawyer Who Argued with the Jewish Origin of the Expert Witness]'. iDNES.cz. 7 December 2016.

- https://www.idnes.cz/zpravy/domaci/advokat-petr-koci-znalec-namitka-zid-komora.A161207_061959_domaci_ane.
- Czech Bar Association. nd. 'Advokáti vystoupili proti kolegovi, který označil znalce za podjatého Žida | Česká advokátní komora [Lawyers Spoke Up Against Colleague Who Labelled Expert Witness as a Biased Jew | Czech Bar Association]'. nd. <https://www.cak.cz/scripts/detail.php?id=7834>.
- Darian-Smith, Eve. 2022. 'Legal Pluralism in Postcolonial, Postnational, and Postdemocratic Times'. In The Oxford Handbook of Law and Anthropology, edited by Marie-Claire Foblets, Mark Goodale, Olaf Zenker, and Maria Sapignoli, 899–916. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Donert, Celia. 2017. The Rights of the Roma: The Struggle for Citizenship in Postwar Czechoslovakia. Human Rights in History. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press. <https://doi.org/10.1017/9781316811641>.
- Drábik, Jakub. 2022. "'With Courage against the System.'" The Ideology of the People's Party Our Slovakia'. Journal of Contemporary Central and Eastern Europe 30 (3): 417–34. <https://doi.org/10.1080/25739638.2022.2164119>.
- Dugovič, Matej. 2016. 'Kotlebovho poslanca nebudú stíhať za výrok, že holokaust sú lži a rozprávky [Kotleba's MP Will Not Be Prosecuted for the Claim that Holocaust Is Lies and Fairy Tales]'. Denník N, 7 September 2016. <https://dennikn.sk/553396/vyrok-kotlebovho-poslanca-mazureka-k-holokaustu-po-policii-neprekaza-ani-prokuraturo/>.
- Dupret, Baudouin. 2016. Adjudication in Action: An Ethnomethodology of Law, Morality and Justice. London: Routledge.
- Dupret, Baudouin, Michael Lynch, and Tim Berard. 2015. 'Introduction: Law at Work'. In Law at Work: Studies in Legal Ethnomethods, edited by Baudouin Dupret, Michael Lynch, and Tim Berard, 1–24. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- ECRI. 2020. 'Sixth Report on Slovakia'. <https://www.coe.int/en/web/european-commission-against-racism-and-intolerance/slovak-republic>.
- Evans, Richard J. 2002. 'History, Memory, and the Law: The Historian as Expert Witness'. History and Theory 41 (3): 326–45. <https://doi.org/10.1111/1468-2303.00209>.
- Farrell, Michelle, Eleanor Drywood, and Edel Hughes. 2019. Human Rights in the Media: Fear and Fetish. London: Routledge.
- Friedman, Lawrence M. 2016. Impact: How Law Affects Behavior. Cambridge, Massachusetts: Harvard University Press.
- Garfinkel, Harold. 2003. 'Ethnomethodology'. In Key Ideas in Sociology, edited by Martin Slattery, 104–8. Cheltenham: Nelson Thornes.
- German Sirotnikova, Miroslava. 2020. 'Slovak Election Dilemma: To Talk or Not to Talk to Fascists?' Balkan Insight (blog). 5 February 2020. <https://balkaninsight.com/2020/02/05/slovak-election-dilemma-to-talk-or-not-to-talk-to-fascists/>.
- Griffiths, John. 1986. 'What Is Legal Pluralism?' The Journal of Legal Pluralism and Unofficial Law 18 (24): 1–55. <https://doi.org/10.1080/07329113.1986.10756387>.
- Haughton, Tim, Marek Rybář, and Kevin Deegan-Krause. 2019. '5 Big Lessons from Slovakia's Presidential Elections'. Washington Post, 18 March 2019. <https://www.washingtonpost.com/politics/2019/03/18/big-lessons-slovakias-presidential-elections/>.
- Heinze, Eric. 2016. Hate Speech and Democratic Citizenship. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Heper, Metin, and Şule Toktaş. 2003. 'Islam, Modernity, and Democracy in Contemporary Turkey: The Case of Recep Tayyip Erdoğan'. The Muslim World 93 (2): 157–85. <https://doi.org/10.1111/1478-1913.00019>.

- Holden, Livia. 2019. 'Beyond Anthropological Expert Witnessing: Toward an Integrated Definition of Cultural Expertise'. In Cultural Expertise and Socio-Legal Studies, 78:181–204. Studies in Law, Politics and Society 78. Bingley: Emerald Publishing Limited. <https://doi.org/10.1108/S1059-433720190000078010>.
- . 2022. 'Anthropologists as Experts: Cultural Expertise, Colonialism, and Positionality'. Law & Social Inquiry 47 (2): 669–90. <https://doi.org/10.1017/lsi.2021.58>.
- Holden, Livia, and Giovanni Tortora. 2017. 'Corrupted Files: Cross-Fading Defense Strategies of a Vesuvian Lawyer'. In Corruption and the Secret of Law: A Legal Anthropological Perspective, edited by Monique Nuijten and Gerhard Anders, 99–122. London: Routledge.
- Holt, Ed. 2020. 'COVID-19 Lockdown of Roma Settlements in Slovakia'. The Lancet Infectious Diseases 20 (6): 659. https://doi.org/10.1016/S1473-3099\(20\)30381-930381-9).
- Horák, Jan. 2016. 'Je to Žid, zaútočil advokát členky DSSS na znalce. Soud mu zrušil pokutu [It Is a Jew, the Lawyer of the Member of DSSS Attacked the Expert Witness. The Court Abolished His Penalty]'. Lidovky.cz. 7 December 2016. https://www.lidovky.cz/domov/soud-zrusil-pokutu-advokatu-kocimu.A161206_130423_In_domov_jho.
- Jasanoff, Sheila. 1997. Science at the Bar: Law, Science, and Technology in America. Reprint edition. Cambridge, Mass: Harvard University Press.
- Kniffka, Hannes. 2007. Working in Language and Law: A German Perspective. Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan. <https://link.springer.com/book/10.1057/9780230590045>.
- Kováč, Peter. 2022. 'Prokurátor Honz: Po Kotlebovi preverujeme aj ľudí z Republiky [Prosecutor Honz: After Kotleba We Also Investigate People from Republika]'. domov.sme.sk. 1 May 2022. <https://domov.sme.sk/c/22895524/tomas-honz-prokurator-rozhovor.html>.
- Krekó, Péter, and Zsolt Enyedi. 2018. 'Explaining Eastern Europe: Orbán's Laboratory of Illiberalism'. Journal of Democracy 29 (3): 39–51. <https://doi.org/10.1353/jod.2018.0043>.
- Kühn, Zdeněk. 2011. The Judiciary in Central and Eastern Europe: Mechanical Jurisprudence in Transformation? Leiden: Martinus Nijhoff Publishers.
- Kusý, Miroslav. 1994. 'Human Rights Education, Constitutionalism and Their Interrelations in Slovakia'. European Journal of Education 29 (4): 377–89. <https://doi.org/10.2307/1503847>.
- Kysel', Tomáš. 2017. 'Poslancovi LSNS preháňajú vyznamenania pre „Židov“ aj ženu, ktorá prežila holokaust [LSNS MP Bothered by Recognition for “Jews” and for a Woman Who Survived the Holocaust]'. Aktuality.sk. 12 January 2017. <https://www.aktuality.sk/clanok/406140/poslancovi-lsns-prekazaju-vyznamenania-pre-zidov-aj-zenu-ktora-prezila-holokaust/>.
- . 2020a. 'Kotleba je vinný v kauze šekov vo výške 1488 eur, dostal 4 roky a 4 mesiace [Kotleba Guilty in the 1488 Euro Cheques Case, Was Sentenced to 4 Years and 4 Months]'. Aktuality.sk. 12 October 2020. <https://www.aktuality.sk/clanok/829669/online-na-sude-s-kotlebom-je-napata-atmosfera-sudkyna-stopla-jeho-advokata/>.
- . 2020b. 'Mazurek má ďalší problém. Polícia začala trestné stíhanie pre status, v ktorom útočníka z Vrútok označil za Róma [Mazurek Has Another Problem. Police Initiated Prosecution for Status, in Which He Labelled the Attacker from Vrútky a Roma]'. Aktuality.sk. 7 October 2020. <https://www.aktuality.sk/clanok/828610/mazurek-ma-dalsi-problem-policia-zacala-trestne-stihanie-pre-status-v-ktorom-utocnika-z-vrutok-oznacil-za-roma/>.

- Land, Molly K. 2020. 'The Problem of Platform Law: Pluralistic Legal Ordering on Social Media'. In The Oxford Handbook of Global Legal Pluralism, edited by Paul Schiff Berman, 975–94. Oxford: OUP.
- Lipstadt, Deborah E. 1994. Denying the Holocaust: The Growing Assault on Truth and Memory. New York: Plume.
- Lobba, Paolo. 2015. 'Holocaust Denial before the European Court of Human Rights: Evolution of an Exceptional Regime'. The European Journal of International Law 26 (1): 237–53. <https://doi.org/10.1093/ejil/chv003>.
- Ludová strana Naše Slovensko. 2019a. 'Milan Mazurek sa stal prvým poslancom NR SR, ktorému odobrili mandát [Milan Mazurek Became the First MP Whose Mandate Was Revoked]'. 3 September 2019. <http://www.naseslovensko.net/cinnost/milan-mazurek-sa-stal-prvym-poslancom-ktoremu-odobrili-mandat-poslanca-nr-sr/>.
- . 2019b. 'Najvyšší súd odmietol zrušenie LS Naše Slovensko. Reakcia vedenia strany po vynesení rozsudku [The Supreme Court Declined the Ban of PPOS. Reaction of the Party Leadership after the Verdict]'. 29 April 2019. <http://www.naseslovensko.net/cinnost/najvyssi-sud-odmietol-zrusenie-ls-nase-slovensko-reakcia-vedenia-strany-po-vyneseni-rozsudku/>.
- Lynch, Michael. 1994. Scientific Practice and Ordinary Action: Ethnomethodology and Social Studies of Science. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press. <https://doi.org/10.1017/CBO9780511625473>.
- . 2015. 'Turning a Witness: The Textual and Interactional Production of a Statement in Adversarial Testimony'. In Law at Work: Studies in Legal Ethnomethods, edited by Baudouin Dupret, Michael Lynch, and Tim Berard, 163–89. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Maková, Denisa. 2019. 'Slovakia: Chair of Neo-Nazi Party Indicted for Using Nazi Symbols on Checks'. Romea.Cz. 2019. <http://www.romea.cz/en/news/world/slovakia-chair-of-neo-nazi-party-indicted-for-using-nazi-symbols-on-checks-2>.
- Malová, Darina, and Branislav Dolný. 2016. 'Economy and Democracy in Slovakia during the Crisis: From a Laggard to the EU Core'. Problems of Post-Communism 63 (5–6): 300–312. <https://doi.org/10.1080/10758216.2016.1200952>.
- Manzo, John F. 2016. 'Ethnomethodology, Conversation Analysis, and the Sociology of Law'. In Law in Action: Ethnomethodological and Conversation Analytic Approaches to Law, edited by Max Travers and John F. Manzo, 1–15. London: Routledge.
- Mareš, Miroslav. 2015. '„Znalci na extremismus“: sociální vědy ve službách vnitřní bezpečnosti? [“Experts on Extremism”: Social Sciences in the Service of Homeland Security?]'. Sociální studia / Social Studies 12 (2): 69–82.
- Mesežnikov, Grigorij, and Oľga Gyárfášová. 2018. 'Slovakia's Conflicting Camps'. Journal of Democracy 29 (3): 78–90. <https://doi.org/10.1353/jod.2018.0046>.
- Milo, Daniel. 2016. Daniel Milo: Keď policajt v službe povie, že extrémistami sú prezident a premiér, niekde je chyba [Daniel Milo: When a Policeperson in Service Says that the Extremists are the President and the PM, Something Went Wrong] Interview by Dušan Mikušovič. Denník N. <https://dennikn.sk/534256/daniel-milo-ked-policajt-v-sluzbe-povie-ze-extremistami-su-prezident-a-premier-niekde-je-chyba/>.
- Ministry of Interior of the Slovak Republic. 2018. 'Národná protiteroristická jednotka [National Anti-Terrorism Unit]'. 2018. <https://www.minv.sk/?narodna-protiteroristicka-jednotka>.
- . 2023. 'Štatistika kriminality v Slovenskej republike [Statistics of Criminality in the Slovak Republic]'. 2023. <https://www.minv.sk/?statistika-kriminality-v-slovenskej-republike-csv>.

- Ministry of Justice of the Czech Republic. 2021. 'Evidence znalců a tlumočnicků [Database of Expert Witnesses and Translators]'. 2021. http://datalot.justice.cz/justice/repznatl.nsf/\$\$\$SearchForm?OpenForm.
- Ministry of Justice of the Slovak Republic. 2018. 'Skúšky a zápis [Exams and Registration]'. 2018. <https://www.justice.gov.sk/Stranky/Nase-sluzby/Civilne-pravo/Znalci/Skusky-Zapis-a-Vyciarknutie.aspx>.
- Molnár, Péter. 2012. 'Responding to "Hate Speech" with Art, Education and the Imminent Danger Test'. In The Content and Context of Hate Speech: Rethinking Regulation and Responses, edited by Michael Herz and Péter Molnár, 183–97. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- National Criminal Agency of Slovakia. 2017a. 'Case PPZ–36/NKA–PZ–ST–2017, Defendant's Written Complaint'.
- . 2017b. 'Case PPZ–36/NKA–PZ–ST–2017, Expert Statement'.
- Noorloos, Marloes van. 2014. 'The Politicisation of Hate Speech Bans in the Twenty-First-Century Netherlands: Law in a Changing Context'. Journal of Ethnic and Migration Studies 40 (2): 249–65. <https://doi.org/10.1080/1369183X.2013.851474>.
- Pacherová, Soňa, and Vanda Vavrová. 2017. 'Nenávist' na webe policajti odhaľujú novou aplikáciou [Police Discovers Hatred on the Web with a New App]'. Pravda, 25 January 2017. <https://spravy.pravda.sk/domace/clanok/417818-nenavist-na-webe-policajti-odhaluju-novou-aplikaciou/>.
- Pech, Laurent, and Kim Lane Scheppele. 2017. 'Illiberalism Within: Rule of Law Backsliding in the EU'. Cambridge Yearbook of European Legal Studies 19 (December):3–47. <https://doi.org/10.1017/cel.2017.9>.
- Pejchal, Viera. 2020. Hate Speech and Human Rights in Eastern Europe: Legislating for Divergent Values. London: Routledge.
- Pešek, Jan. 2013. 'The Establishment of Totalitarianism in Slovakia after the February Coup of 1948 and the Culmination of Mass Persecution, 1948–1953'. In Slovakia in History, edited by Mikuláš Teich, Dušan Kováč, and Martin D. Brown, 284–98. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Petersen, Niels. 2013. 'Avoiding the Common-Wisdom Fallacy: The Role of Social Sciences in Constitutional Adjudication'. International Journal of Constitutional Law 11 (2): 294–318. <https://doi.org/10.1093/icon/mot008>.
- Přibáň, Jiří, and Wojciech Sadurski. 2007. 'The Role of Political Rights in the Democratization of Central and Eastern Europe'. In Political Rights under Stress in 21st Century Europe, edited by Wojciech Sadurski, 196–238. Oxford: OUP.
- Rekker, Roderik, and Joost van Spanje. 2022. 'Hate Speech Prosecution of Politicians and Its Effect on Support for the Legal System and Democracy'. British Journal of Political Science 52 (2): 886–907. <https://doi.org/10.1017/S000712342000068X>.
- Renteln, Alison Dundes. 2004. The Cultural Defense. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Republika. 2023. 'Náš tím [Our Team]'. 2023. <https://www.hnutie-republika.sk/nas-tim/>.
- Rose, Arnold M. 1955. 'The Social Scientist as an Expert Witness'. Minnesota Law Review 40:205–18.
- Rupnik, Jacques. 2016. 'Surging Illiberalism in the East'. Journal of Democracy 27 (4): 77–87.
- Ryšavý, Zdeněk. 2017. 'Slovak MP Charged with Insulting Romani People and Inciting Hatred on the Radio'. Romea.Cz. 12 July 2017. <http://www.romea.cz/en/news/world/slovak-mp-charged-with-insulting-romani-people-and-inciting-hatred-on-the-radio>.
- SITA. 2018. 'Mazurek na súde namieta znalca. Tvrdí, že je Žid [Mazurek at Court Objected Towards the Expert Witness, Claims He Is a Jew]'. Sme, 27 February 2018.

- <https://domov.sme.sk/c/20769954/mazurek-na-sude-namietal-znalca-tvrdi-ze-je-zid.html>.
- Šnidl, Vladimír. 2018. 'Rostas a Mizík citujú Štúrove výroky o Židoch, ale nechápu ich, hovorí historik [Rostas and Mizík Quote Štúr's Statements About the Jews, but They Do Not Understand Them, Says Historian]'. Denník N, 6 June 2018. <https://dennikn.sk/1143939/rosta-a-mizik-cituju-sturove-vyroky-o-zidoch-ale-nechapu-ich-hovori-historik/>.
- Steuer, Max. 2016. 'The International Helping Hand? The Impact of the Council of Europe on Policies towards "Hate Speech" in Slovakia'. Friedrich Ebert Stiftung. http://fesbp.hu/common/pdf/Hate_Speech_Steuer_20160519.pdf.
- . 2017. 'Extrémny slobody prejavu a úloha právnej regulácie [The Extremes of Freedom of Speech and the Role of Legal Regulation]'. Časopis pro právní vědu a praxi 25 (3): 475–91. <https://doi.org/10.5817/CPVP2017-3-7>.
- . 2019. 'Militant Democracy on the Rise: Consequences of Legal Restrictions on Extreme Speech in the Czech Republic, Slovakia and Hungary'. Review of Central and East European Law 44 (2): 162–201. <https://doi.org/10.1163/15730352-04402003>.
- . 2022. 'The Role of Judicial Craft in Improving Democracy's Resilience: The Case of Party Bans in Czechia, Hungary and Slovakia'. European Constitutional Law Review 18 (3): 440–65. <https://doi.org/10.1017/S1574019622000256>.
- . 2023. 'Cultural Expertise and Extreme Speech'. In Cultural Expertise, Law, and Rights: A Comprehensive Guide, edited by Livia Holden, 158–65. London: Routledge.
- Stremlau, Nicole, and Iginio Gagliardone. 2019. 'Socio-Legal Approaches to Online Hate Speech'. In Routledge Handbook of Socio-Legal Theory and Methods, 385–98. London: Routledge.
- Surmánek, Štefan. 2014. Pravdivý obraz o živote a postavení cigánských komunit na (východnom) Slovensku [The Truthful Picture of the Life and Standing of Gypsy Communities in (Eastern) Slovakia]. Košice: ELFA.
- Svoboda, Ivo. 2016. 'Možnosti postihu trestných činů z nenávisťi s podporou platných judikátů a jejich interpretace ve vyšetřování a kriminalistice [Possibilities of Criminal Investigation and Legal Sanction of Hate Crimes Supported by Settled Case Law]'. Policajná teória a prax, no. 1, 82–96.
- Tamanaha, Brian Z. 2021. 'Legal Pluralism across the Global South: Colonial Origins and Contemporary Consequences'. The Journal of Legal Pluralism and Unofficial Law 53 (2): 168–205.
- Temperman, Jeroen. 2011. 'Freedom of Expression and Religious Sensitivities in Pluralist Societies: Facing the Challenge of Extreme Speech'. Brigham Young University Law Review 2011:729–56.
- Uhrík, Milan. 2018. 'Mazurek na politickom súde, policajné razie a vražda novinára. Slovensko, kam speješ?! [Mazurek on a Political Trial, Police Raids, and Murder of a Journalist. Slovakia, Where Are You Heading?!]'. Ľudová strana Naše Slovensko. 28 February 2018. <http://www.naseslovensko.net/cinnost/reportaze-z-akcii/mazurek-na-politickom-sude-policajne-razie-a-vrazda-novinara-slovensko-kam-spejes/>.
- Virchow, Fabian. 2017. 'Post-Fascist Right-Wing Social Movements'. In The History of Social Movements in Global Perspective: A Survey, edited by Stefan Berger and Holger Nehring, 619–46. Palgrave Studies in the History of Social Movements. London: Palgrave Macmillan UK. https://doi.org/10.1057/978-1-137-30427-8_21.
- Weber, Max. 1978. Economy and Society: An Outline of Interpretive Sociology. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Weinstein, James, and Ivan Hare. 2009. 'General Introduction: Free Speech, Democracy, and the Suppression of Extreme Speech Past and Present'. In Extreme Speech and Democracy, edited by Ivan Hare and James Weinstein, 1–8. Oxford: Oxford University Press.

<http://www.oxfordscholarship.com/view/10.1093/acprof:oso/9780199548781.001.0001/acprof-9780199548781-chapter-1>.

Wilson, Richard Ashby. 2016. ‘Expert Evidence on Trial: Social Researchers in the International Criminal Courtroom’. American Ethnologist 43 (4): 730–44. <https://doi.org/10.1111/amet.12387>.

Zákon o znalcoch, tlmočníkoch a prekladateľoch [Act on Expert Witnesses, Translators and Interpreters]. 2019. <http://www.zakonypreludi.sk/zz/2004-382>.

Žitňanská, Lucia. 2016. ‘Majú extrémisti právo na extrémizmus? [Do Extremists Have the Right to Extremism?]’. Denník N, 28 October 2016. <https://dennikn.sk/595241/ucinnejsie-proti-extremizmu/>.

Cases cited

2To/10/2018. 2019. Supreme Court of the Slovak Republic.

2To/13/2018. 2019. Supreme Court of the Slovak Republic.

3SŽ/79/2005. 2006. Supreme Court of the Slovak Republic.

4T/36/2017. 2018. Specialised Criminal Court of the Slovak Republic.

4Tdo/49/2012. 2013. Supreme Court of the Slovak Republic.

4Volpp/1/2017. 2019. Supreme Court of the Slovak Republic.

Irving v. Penguin Books Limited, Deborah E. Lipstadt. 2000. High Court of Justice, UK.

PL. US 5/2017. 2019. Constitutional Court of the Slovak Republic.

Notes

¹ See Lobba (2015) on the approach of the European Court of Human Rights.

² For advice on how lawyers should work with expert witnesses including the need to recognise the non-adversarial nature of scientific evidence see Rose (1955).

³ When explaining this preference of the judges, Wilson (2016, 738) writes of “the divergent understandings of causation held by lawyers and social scientists”, whereby only the former need to demonstrate an unambiguous causal nexus between the “accused’s act” and the “offence”.

⁴ In particular, the defendant’s attorney questioned the unbiasedness of the expert Michal Mazel due to his allegedly Jewish origin (Czech Bar Association nd).

⁵ I have not had access to the text of the indictment, so I cannot state with certainty whether there was a causal link between my report and the indictment.

⁶ MA in International Relations and European Studies.

⁷ Rupnik (2016, 79) even called them neo-fascists and Drábik (2022) used the label of “neo-Nazi”.

⁸ Mazurek’s move had its predecessor in Czechia, where the question was posed to an expert witness by the defendant’s attorney who was subsequently sanctioned by the Czech Bar Association. The sanction was reversed by a court in 2016 (ČTK 2016).

⁹ Moreover, an earlier Czech case pointed to the costs entailed in such an association of bias with ethnic or religious origin. An attorney of a Czech far right politician accused one of the expert witnesses of bias due to his Jewish origin. The attorney was fined and temporarily stripped of his license to practice law (Horák 2016). Still, the expert witness who was targeted ceased his activity shortly after this incident, referring to it as a major reason for his refusal to engage in cultural expertise (ibid.).

¹⁰ In the European Parliament elections in May 2019, Mazurek became the party’s first substitute for a seat.

¹¹ In this case the exclusion of the Roma from the category of the Slovak nation. My expert testimony has been recorded in the minutes, including on this point (4T/36/2017 2018, 10–12).

¹² The effect of framing in oral expert testimony and the subsequent possibility for both parties to draw on the arguments of the expert witness is examined in one case by Lynch (2015).